JOHN LEES, ESQUIRE,
PRESIDENT OF THE ACADEMY IN WARRINGTON.

SIR,

THIS work having been undertaken principally with the design of assisting the Students at Warrington in acquiring a just and graceful Elocution, I feel a peculiar propriety in addressing it to you, as a public acknowledgment of the steady support which you have given to this Institution, and the important services which you have rendered it.

IN this Seminary, which was at first established, and has been uniformly conducted, on the extensive plan of providing a proper course of Instruction for young men in the most useful branches of Science and Literature, you have seen many respectable characters formed, who are now filling up their stations in society with reputation to themselves and advantage to the Public. And, while the same great object continues to be pursued, by faithful endeavours to cultivate the understanding of youth, and by a steady attention to discipline, it is hoped, that you will have the satisfaction to observe the same effects produced, and that the scene will be realized, which OUR POETES; has so beautifully described:

When this, this little group their country calls
 From academic shades and learned halls,
 To fix her laws, her spirit to sustain,
 And light up glory thro' her wide domain;
 Their various tastes in different arts display'd,
 Like temper'd harmony of light and shade,
 With friendly union in one mass shall blend,
 And this adorn the state, and that defend.

I am,

With sincere Respect and Gratitude,

DEAR SIR,

Your much obliged,

and most humble Servant,

AN
ELOCUTION.

MUCH declamation has been employed to convince the world of a very plain truth, that to be able to speak well is an ornamental and useful accomplishment. Without the laboured panegyrics of antient or modern orators, the importance of a good elocution is sufficiently obvious. Every one will acknowledge it to be of some consequence, that what a man has hourly occasion to do, should be done well. Every private company, and almost every public assembly affords opportunities of remarking the difference between a just and graceful, and a faulty and unnatural elocution; and there are few persons who do not daily experience the advantages of the former, and the inconveniences of the latter. The great difficulty is, not to prove that it is a desirable thing to be able to read and speak with propriety, but to point out a practicable and easy method by which this accomplishment may be acquired.

FOLLOW NATURE, is certainly the fundamental law of Oratory, without a regard to which, all other rules will only produce affected declamation; not just elocution. And some accurate observers, judging, perhaps, from a few unlucky specimens of modern eloquence, have concluded that this is the only law which ought to be prescribed; that all artificial rules are useless; and that good sense, and a cultivated taste, are the only requisites to form a good public speaker. But it is true in the art of speaking, as well as in the art of living, that general precepts are of little use till they are unfolded, and applied to particular cases. To observe the various ways by which nature expresses the several perceptions, emotions and passions of the human mind, and to distinguish these from the mere effect of arbitrary custom or false taste; to discover and correct those tones, and habits of speaking, which are gross deviations from nature, and as far as they prevail must destroy all propriety and grace of utterance; and to make choice of such a course of practical lessons, as shall give the Speaker an opportunity of exercising himself in each breach of elocution; all this must be the effect of attention and labour; and in all this much assistance may certainly be derived from instruction. What are rules or lessons for acquiring this or any other art, but the observations of others, collected into a narrow compass, and digested in a natural order, for the direction of the unexperienced and unpractised learner? And what is there in the art of speaking, which should render it incapable of receiving aid from precepts?

PRESUMING then, that the acquisition of the art of speaking, like all other practical arts, may be facilitated by rules, I proceed to lay before my readers, in a plain didactic form, such Rules respecting elocution, as appear best adapted to form a correct and graceful Speaker.

R U L E I.

Let your Articulation be distinct and deliberate.

A GOOD Articulation consists in giving a clear and full utterance to the several simple and complex sounds. The nature of these sounds, therefore, ought to be well understood; and much pains should be taken to discover and correct those faults in articulation, which, though often ascribed to some defect in the organs of speech, are generally the consequence of inattention or bad example. Many of these respect the sounding of the consonants. Some cannot pronounce the letter l, and others the simple sounds r, s, th, sh; others generally omit the aspirate h. These faults may be corrected, by reading sentences, so contrived as often to repeat the faulty sounds; and by guarding against them in familiar conversation.

OTHER defects in articulation regard the complex sounds, and consist in a confused and clattering pronunciation of words. The most effectual methods of conquering this habit, are, to read aloud passages chosen for the purpose (such for instance as abounds with long and unusual words, or in which many short syllables come together) and to read, at certain stated times, much slower than the sense and just speaking would require. Almost all persons, who have not studied the art of speaking, have a habit of uttering their words so rapidly, that this latter exercise ought generally to be made use of for a considerable time at first: for where there is a uniformly rapid utterance, it is absolutely impossible that there should be strong emphasis, natural tones, or any just elocution.

Aim at nothing higher, till you can read distinctly and deliberately.

LEARN to speak slow, all other graces
Will follow in their proper places.

R U L E II.

Let your pronunciation be bold and forcible.

AN insipid flatness and languor is almost the universal fault in reading; and even public speakers often suffer their words to drop from their lips with such a faint and feeble utterance, that they appear neither to understand or feel what they say themselves, nor to have any desire that it should be understood or felt by their audience. This is a fundamental fault: a speaker without energy, is a lifeless statue.

IN order to acquire a forcible manner of pronouncing your words, inure yourself while reading to draw in as much air as your lungs can contain with ease, and to expel it with vehemence, in uttering those sounds which require an emphatical pronunciation; read aloud in the open air, and with all the exertion you can command; preserve your body in an erect attitude while you are speaking; let all the consonant sounds be expressed with a full impulse or percussion of the breath, and a forcible action of the organs employed in forming them; and let all the vowel sounds have a full and bold utterance. Practise these rules with perseverance, till you have acquired strength and energy of speech.

BUT in observing this rule, beware of running into the extreme of vociferation. We find this fault chiefly among those, who, in contempt and despite of all rule and propriety, are determined to command the attention of the vulgar. These are the speakers, who, in Shakespear's phrase, "offend the judicious hearer to the soul, by tearing a passion to rags, to very very tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings." Cicero compares such speakers to cripples who get on horse-back because they cannot walk: they bellow, because they cannot speak.

R U L E III.

Acquire a compass and variety in the height of your voice.

THE monotony so much complained of in public speakers, is chiefly owing to the neglect of this rule. They generally content themselves with one certain key, which they employ on all occasions, and on every subject: or if they attempt variety, it is only in proportion to the number of their hearers, and the extent of the places in which they speak; imagining, that speaking in a high key is the same thing as speaking loud; and not observing, that whether a speaker shall be heard or not, depends more upon the distinctness and force with which he utters his words, than upon the height at which he pitches his voice.

BUT it is an essential qualification of a good speaker, to be able to alter the height, as well as the strength and the tone of his voice, as occasion requires. Different species of speaking require different heights of voice. Nature instructs us to relate a story, to support an argument, to command a servant, to utter exclamations of anger or rage, and to pour forth lamentations and sorrows, not only with different tones, but different elevations of voice. Men at different ages of life, and in different situations, speak in very different keys. The vagrant when he begs; the soldier, when he gives the word of command; the watchman, when he announces the hour of the night; the sovereign, when he issues his edict; the senator, when he harangues; the lover, when he whispers his tender tale; do not differ more in the tones which they use, than in the key in which they speak. Reading and speaking, therefore, in which all the variations of expression in real life are copied, must have continual variations in the height of the voice.

To acquire the power of changing the key on which you speak at pleasure, accustom yourself to pitch your voice in different keys, from the lowest to the highest notes you can command. Many of these would neither be proper nor agreeable in speaking; but the exercise will give you such a command of voice, as is scarcely to be acquired by any other method. Having repeated this experiment till you can speak with ease at several heights of the voice; read, as exercises on this rule, such compositions as have a variety of speakers, or such as relate dialogues, observing the height of voice which is proper to each, and endeavouring to change them as nature directs.

In the same composition there may be frequent occasion to alter the height of the voice, in passing from one part to another, without any change of person. Shakespear's "All the world's a stage," &c. and his description of the Queen of the Fairies, afford examples of this. Indeed every sentence which is read or spoken will admit of different elevations of the voice in different parts of it; and on this chiefly, perhaps entirely, depends the melody of pronunciation.

R U L E IV.

Pronounce your words with propriety and elegance.

IT is not easy indeed to fix upon any standard, by which the propriety of pronunciation is to be determined. Mere men of learning, in attempting to make the etymology of words the rule of pronunciation, ation, often pronounce words in a manner, which brings upon them the charge of affectation and pedantry. Mere men of the world, notwithstanding all their politeness, often retain so much of their provincial dialect, or commit such errors both in speaking and writing, as to exclude them from the honour of being the standard of accurate pronunciation. We should perhaps look for this standard only among those who unite these two characters, and with the correctness and precision of true learning combine the ease and elegance of genteel life. An attention to such models; and a free intercourse with the polite world, are the best guards against the peculiarities and vulgarisms of provincial dialects. Those which respect the pronunciation of words are innumerable. Some of the principal of them are; omitting the aspirate h where it ought to be used, and inserting it where there should be none; confounding and interchanging the v and w; pronouncing the diphthong ou like au, or like oo, and the vowel i like oi or e; and cluttering many consonants together without regarding the vowels. These faults, and all others of the same nature, must be corrected in the pronunciation of a gentleman, who is supposed to have seen too much of the world, to retain the peculiarities of the district in which he was born.

R U L E V.

Pronounce every word consisting of more than one syllable with its proper ACCENT.

THERE is a necessity for this direction, because many speakers have affected an unusual and pedantic mode of accenting words, laying it down as a rule, that the accent should be cast as far backwards as possible; a rule which has no foundation in the construction of the English language, or in the laws of harmony. In accenting words, the general custom and a good ear are the best guides:

only it may be observed that accent should be regulated, not by any arbitrary rules of quantity, or by the false idea that there are only two lengths in syllables, and that two short syllables are always equal to one long, but by the number and nature of the simple sounds.

R U L E VI.

In every sentence, distinguish the more significant words by a natural, forcible, and varied EMPHASIS.

EMPHASIS points out the precise meaning of a sentence, shows in what manner one idea is connected with, and rises out of another, marks the several clauses of a sentence, gives to every part its proper sound, and thus conveys to the mind of the reader the full import of the whole. It is in the power of emphasis to make long and complex sentences appear intelligible and perspicuous. But for this purpose it is necessary, that the reader should be perfectly acquainted with the exact construction and full meaning of every sentence which he recites. Without this it is impossible to give those inflexions and variations to the voice, which nature requires: and it is for want of this previous study, more perhaps than from any other cause, that we so often hear persons read with an improper emphasis, or with no emphasis at all, that is, with a stupid monotony. Much study and pains are necessary in acquiring the habit of just and forcible pronunciation; and it can only be the effect of close attention and long practice, to be able, with a mere glance of the eye, to read any piece with good emphasis and good discretion.

It is another office of Emphasis to express the opposition between the several parts of a sentence where the style is pointed and antithetical. Pope's Essay on Man, and his Moral Essays, and the Proverbs verbs of Solomon, will furnish many proper exercises in this species of speaking. In some sentences the antithesis is double, and even treble; these must be expressed in reading, by a very distinct emphasis on each part of the opposition. The following instances are of this kind:

ANGER may glance into the breast of a wise man; but rests only in the bosom of fools.

AN angry man who suppresses his passion, thinks worse than he speaks; and an angry man that will chide, speaks worse than he thinks.

BETTER to reign in hell, than serve in heaven.

HE rais'd a mortal to the skies;
She brought an angel down.

EMPHASIS likewise serves to express some particular meaning not immediately arising from the words, but depending upon the intention of the speaker, or some incidental circumstance. The following short sentence may have three different meanings, according to the different place of the Emphasis: Do you intend to go to London, this summer?

IN order to acquire a habit of speaking with a just and forcible emphasis, nothing more is necessary than previously to study the construction, meaning, and spirit of every sentence, and to adhere as nearly as possible to the manner in which we distinguish one word from another in conversation; for in familiar discourse we scarcely ever fail to express ourselves emphatically, or place the emphasis improperly. With respect to artificial helps, such as distinguishing words or clauses of sentences by particular characters or marks; I believe it will always be found, upon trial, that they mislead instead of assisting the reader, by not leaving him at full liberty to follow his own understanding and feelings

THE most common faults respecting emphasis are, laying so strong an emphasis on one word as to leave no power of giving a particular force to other words, which, though not equally, are in a certain degree emphatical; and placing the greatest stress on conjunctive particles, and other words of secondary importance. These faults are strongly characterised in Churchill's censure of Moscrop.

With studied improprieties of speech
 He soars beyond the hackney critic's reach,
 To epithets allots emphatic state,
 Whilst principals, ungrac'd, like lacquies wait;
 In ways first trodden by himself excels,
 And stands alone in indeclinables;
 Conjunction, preposition, adverb, join
 To stamp new vigour on the nervous line.
 In monosyllables his thunders roll,
 HE; SHE, IT, AND, WE, YE; THEY, fright the soul.

EMPHASIS is often destroyed by an injudicious attempt to read melodiously. Agreeable inflexions and easy variations of the voice, as far as they arise from, or are consistent with just speaking, are worthy of attention. But to substitute one unmeaning tune, in the room of all the proprieties and graces of good elocution, and then to applaud this manner, under the appellation of musical speaking, can only be the effect of great ignorance and inattention, or of a depraved taste. If public speaking must be musical, let the words be set to music in recitative, that these melodious speakers may no longer lie open to the sarcasm; Do you read or sing? if you sing, you sing very ill. Seriously, it is much to be wondered at, that this kind of reading, which has so little merit considered as music, and none at all considered as speaking, should be so studiously practised by many speakers, and so much admired by many hearers. Can a method of reading, which is so entirely different from the usual manner of conversation, be natural and right? Is it possible that all the varieties of sentiment which a public speaker has occasion to introduce, should be properly expressed by one melodious tone and cadence, employed alike on all occasions and for all purposes?
 of

R U L E VII.

Acquire a just variety of Pause and Cadence.

ONE of the worst faults a speaker can have, is to make no other pauses than what he finds barely necessary for breathing. I know of nothing that such a speaker can so properly be compared to, as an alarm-bell, which, when once set a-going, clatters on till the weight that moves it, is run down. Without pauses, the sense must always appear confused and obscure, and often be misunderstood; and the spirit and energy of the piece must be wholly lost.

IN executing this part of the office of a speaker, it will by no means be sufficient to attend to the points used in printing; for these are far from marking all the pauses which ought to be made in speaking. A mechanical attention to these resting places has perhaps been one chief cause of monotony, by leading the reader to a uniform cadence at every full period. The use of points is to assist the reader in discerning the grammatical construction, not to direct his pronunciation. In reading, it may often be proper to make a pause where the printer has made none. Nay, it is very allowable for the sake of pointing out the sense more strongly, preparing the audience for what is to follow, or enabling the speaker to alter the tone or height of the voice, sometimes to make a very considerable pause, where the grammatical construction requires none at all. In doing this, however, it is necessary that in the word immediately preceding the pause, the voice be kept up in such a manner as to intimate to the hearer hearer that the sense is not completed. Mr. GARRICK, the first of speakers, often observes this rule with great success. This particular excellence Mr. Sterne has described in his usual sprightly manner. See the following Work, Book VI. Chap. III.

BEFORE a full pause it has been customary in reading to drop the voice in a uniform manner ; and this has been called the cadence. But surely nothing can be more destructive of all propriety and energy than this habit. The tones and heights at the close of a sentence ought to be infinitely diversified, according to the general nature of the discourse, and the particular construction and meaning of the sentence. In plain narrative, and especially in argumentation, the least attention to the manner in which we relate a story, or support an argument in conversation will show, that it is more frequently proper to raise the voice than to fall it at the end of a sentence. Interrogatives, where the speaker seems to expect an answer, should almost always be elevated at the close, with a particular tone, to indicate that a question is asked. Some sentences are so constructed, that the last words require a stronger emphasis than any of the preceding ; while others admit of being closed with a soft and gentle sound. Where there is nothing in the sense which requires the last sound to be elevated or emphatical, an easy fall, sufficient to show that the sense is finished, will be proper. And in pathetic pieces, especially those of the plaintive, tender or solemn kind, the tone of the passion will often require a still greater cadence of the voice. But before a speaker can be able to fall his voice with propriety and judgment at the close of a sentence, he must be able to keep it from falling, and to rise it with all the variation which the sense requires. The best method of correcting a uniform cadence is frequently to read select sentences, in which the style is pointed and frequent antitheses are introduced, and argumentative pieces, or such as abound with interrogatives.

R U L E VIII.

Accompany the Emotions and Passions which your words express, by correspondent tones, looks, and gestures.

THERE is the language of emotions and passions, as well as of ideas. To express the former is the peculiar province of words ; to express the latter, nature teaches us to make use of tones, looks, and gestures. When anger, fear, joy, grief, love, or any other active passion arises in our minds, we naturally discover it by the particular manner in which we utter our words ; by the features of the countenance, and by other well known signs. And even when we speak without any of the more violent emotions, some kind of feeling usually accompanies our words, and this, whatever it be, hath its proper external expression. Expression indeed hath been so little studied in public speaking, that we seem almost to have forgotten the language of nature, and are ready to consider every attempt to recover it, as the laboured and affected effort of art. But nature is always the same ; and every judicious imitation of it will always be pleasing. Nor can any one deserve the appellation of a good speaker, much less of a complete orator, till to distinct articulation, a good command of voice, and just emphasis, he is able to add the various expressions of emotion and passion.

To enumerate these expressions, and describe them in all their variations, is impracticable. Attempts have been made with some success to analyze the language of ideas ; but the language of sentiment and emotion has never yet been analyzed ; and perhaps it is not within the reach of human ability, to write a Philosophical Grammar of the passions. Or, if it were possible in any degree to execute this design, I cannot think, that from such a grammar it would would be possible for any one to instruct himself in the use of the language. All endeavours therefore to make men Orators by describing to them in words the manner in which their voice, countenance, and hands are to be employed, in expressing the passions, must, in my apprehension, be weak and ineffectual. And, perhaps, the only instruction which can be given with advantage on this head, is this general one : Observe what manner the several emotions or passions are expressed in real life, or by those who have with great labour and taste acquired a power of imitating nature ; and accustom yourself either to follow the great original itself, or the best copies you meet with, always however, " with this special observance, that you O'ERSTEP NOT THE MODESTY OF NATURE."

IN the application of these rules to practice, in order to acquire a just and graceful elocution, it will be necessary to go through a regular course of exercises ; beginning with such as are most easy, and proceeding by slow steps to such as are most difficult. In the choice of these, the practitioner should pay a particular attention to his prevailing defects, whether they regard articulation, command of voice, emphasis, or cadence : and he should content himself with reading and speaking with an immediate view to the correcting of his fundamental faults, before he aims at any thing higher. This may be irksome and disagreeable ; it may require much patience and resolution ; but it is the only way to succeed. For if a man cannot read simple sentences, or plain narrative or didactic pieces, with distinct articulation, just emphasis, and proper tones, how can he expect to do justice to the sublime descriptions of poetry, or the animated language of the passions ?

IN performing these exercises, the learner should daily read aloud by himself, and as often as he has opportunity, under the correction of an instructor or friend. He should also frequently recite compositions memoriter. This method has several advantages : it obliges the speaker to dwell upon the ideas which he is to express, and hereby enables him to discern their particular meaning and force, and gives him a previous knowledge of the several inflexions, emphases, and tones which the words require. And by taking off his eye from the book, it in part relieves him from the influence of the school-boy habit of reading in a different key and tone from that of conversation ; and gives him greater liberty to attempt the expression of the countenance and gesture.

It were much to be wished, that all public speakers would deliver their thoughts and sentiments, either from memory or immediate conception : for, besides that there is an artificial uniformity which almost always distinguishes reading from speaking, the fixed posture, and the bending of the head which reading requires, are inconsistent with the freedom, ease, and variety of just elocution. But, if this is too much to be expected, especially from Preachers, who have so much to compose, and are so often called upon to speak in public ; it is however extremely desirable, that they should make themselves so well acquainted with their discourse as to be able with a single glance of the eye, to take in several clauses, or the whole, of a sentence. *

I HAVE only to add, that after the utmost pains have been taken to acquire a just elocution, and this with the greatest success ; there is some difficulty in carrying the art of speaking out of the school, or chamber, to the bar, the senate, or the pulpit. A young man, who has been accustomed to perform frequent exercises in this art in private, cannot easily persuade himself, when he appears before the public,

* See Dean Swift's advice on this head in his Letter to a young Clergyman.

lic, to consider the business he has to perform in any other light, than as a trial of skill, and a display of oratory. Hence it is, that the character of an Orator has of late often been treated with ridicule, sometimes with contempt. We are pleased with the easy and graceful movements which the true gentleman has acquired by having learned to dance ; but we are offended by the coxcomb, who is always exhibiting his formal dancing-bow, and minuet-step. So, we admire the manly eloquence and noble ardour of a British Legislator, rising up in defence of the rights of his country ; the quick recollection, the forcible reasoning, and the ready utterance of the accomplished Barrister ; and the sublime devotion, genuine dignity, and unaffected earnestness of the sacred Orator : but when a man in either of these capacities, so far forgets the ends and degrades the consequence of his profession, as to set himself forth to public view under the character of a Spouter, and to parade it in the ears of the vulgar with all the pomp of artificial eloquence, though the unskilful may gaze and applaud, the judicious cannot but be grieved and disgusted. Avail yourself, then, of your skill in the Art of Speaking, but always employ your powers of elocution with caution and modesty ; remembering, that though it be desirable to be admired as an eminent Orator, it is of much more importance to be respected, as a wise Statesman, an able Lawyer, or a useful Preacher.

SELECT SENTENCES.

C H A P. I.

TO be ever active in laudable pursuits, is the distinguishing characteristic of a man of merit.

THERE is an heroic innocence, as well as an heroic courage.

THERE is a mean in all things. Even virtue itself hath its stated limits ; which not being strictly observed, ceases to be virtue.

IT is wiser to prevent a quarrel before hand, than to revenge it afterwards.

IT is much better to reprove, than to be angry secretly.

NO revenge is more heroic, than that which torments envy by doing good.

THE discretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to pass over a transgression.

MONEY, like manure, does no good till it is spread. There is no real use of riches, except in the distribution ; the rest is all conceit.

A WISE man will desire no more than what he may get justly, use soberly, distribute chearfully, and live upon contentedly.

A CONTENTED mind, and a good conscience, will make a man happy in all conditions. He knows not how to fear, who dares to die.

THERE is but one way of fortifying the soul against all gloomy presages and terrors of mind ; and that is, by securing to ourselves the friendship and protection of that Being who disposes of events, and governs futurity.

PHILOSOPHY is then only valuable, when it serves for the law of life, and not for the ostentation of science.

C H A P. II.

WITHOUT a friend the world is but a wilderness.

A MAN may have a thousand intimate acquaintances, and not a friend among them all. If you have one friend think yourself happy.

WHEN once you profess yourself a friend, endeavour to be always such. He can never have any true friends, that will be often changing them.

PROSPERITY gains friends, and adversity tries them.

NOTHING more engages the affection of men, than a handsome address, and graceful conversation.

COMPLAISANCE renders a superior amiable, an equal agreeable, and an inferior acceptable.

EXCESS of ceremony shews want of breeding. That civility is best, which excludes all superfluous formality.

INGRATITUDE is a crime so shameful, that the man was never yet found, who would acknowledge himself guilty of it.

TRUTH is born with us; and we must do violence to nature, to shake off our veracity.

THERE cannot be a greater treachery, than first to raise a confidence, and then deceive it.

By others faults, wise men correct their own.

No man hath a thorough taste of prosperity, to whom adversity never happened.

WHEN

WHEN our vices leave us, we flatter ourselves that we leave them.

IT is as great point of wisdom to hide ignorance, as to discover knowledge.

PITCH upon that course of life which is the most excellent; and habit will render it the most delightful.

C H A P. III.

CUSTOM is the plague of wise men, and the idol of fools.

As to be perfectly just, is an attribute of the divine nature; to be so to the utmost of our abilities, is the glory of man.

No man was ever cast down with the injuries of fortune, unless he had before suffered himself to be deceived by her favours.

ANGER may glance in the breast of a wise man, but rests only in the bosom of fools.

NONE more impatiently suffer injuries, than those that are most forward in doing them.

By taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over, he is superior.

To err is human; to forgive, divine.

A MORE glorious victory cannot be gained over another man, than this, that when the injury began on his part, the kindness should begin on ours.

THE prodigal robs his heir, the miser robs himself.

WE should take a prudent care for the future, but so as to enjoy the present. It is no part of wisdom, to be miserable to-day, because we may happen to be so to-morrow.

To mourn without measure is folly; not to mourn at all, insensibility.

SOME would be thought to do great things, who are but tools and instruments; like the fool who fancied he played upon the organ, when he only blew the bellows.

THOUGH a man may become learned by another's learning, he can never be wise but by his own wisdom.

HE who wants good sense is unhappy in having learning ; for he has thereby more ways of exposing himself.

IT is ungenerous to give a man occasion to blush at his own ignorance, in one thing, who perhaps may excel us in many.

NO object is more pleasing to the eye, than the sight of the man whom you have obliged ; nor any music so agreeable to the ear, as the voice of one that owns you for his benefactor.

THE coin that is most current among mankind is flattery ; the only benefit of which is, that by hearing what we are not, we may be instructed what we ought to be.

THE character of the person who commends you, is to be considered before you set a value on his esteem. The wise man applauds him whom he thinks most virtuous, the rest of the world him who is most wealthy.

THE temperate man's pleasures are durable, because they are regular ; and all his life is calm and serene, because it is innocent.

A GOOD man will love himself too well to lose, and his neighbour too well to win, an estate by gaming. The love of gaming will corrupt the best principles in the world.

C H A P. IV.

AN angry man who suppresses his passions, thinks worse than he speaks : and an angry man that will chide, speaks worse than he thinks.

A GOOD word is an easy obligation ; but not to speak ill requires only our silence, which costs us nothing.

IT is to affectation the world owes its whole race of coxcombs. Nature in her whole drama never drew drew such a part ; she has sometimes made a fool, but a coxcomb is always of his own making.

IT is the infirmity of little minds, to be taken with every appearance, and dazzled with every thing that sparkles ; but great minds have but little admiration, because few things appear new to them.

IT happens to men of learning, as to ears of corn ; they shoot up, and raise their heads high, while they are empty ; but when full, and swelled with grain, they begin to flag and droop.

HE that is truly politic knows how to contradict with respect, and to please without adulation ; and is equally remote from an insipid complaisance, and a low familiarity.

THE failings of good men are commonly more published in the world than their good deeds ; and one fault of a deserving man, shall meet with more reproaches, than all his virtues, praise : such is the force of ill-will, and ill-nature.

IT is harder to avoid censure, than to gain applause ; for this may be done by one great or wise action in an age ; but to escape censure, a man must pass his whole life without saying or doing one ill or foolish thing.

WHEN Darius offered Alexander ten thousand talents to divide Asia equally with him, he answered, the earth cannot bear two suns, nor Asia two kings. Parmenio, a friend to Alexander, hearing the great offers Darius had made, said, were I Alexander I would accept them. So would I, replied Alexander, were I Parmenio.

NOBILITY is to be considered only as an imaginary distinction, unless accompanied with the practice of those generous virtues by which it ought to be obtained. Titles of honour conferred upon such as have no personal merit, are at best but the royal stamp set upon base metal.

THOUGH an honourable title may be conveyed to posterity, yet the ennobling qualities, which are the soul of greatness, are a sort of incommunicable perfections, and cannot be transferred. If a man could bequeath his virtues by will, and settle his sense and learning upon his heirs, as certainly as he can his lands, a noble descent would then indeed be a valuable privilege.

TRUTH is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out. It is always near at hand, and sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware: whereas a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon the rack; and one trick needs a great many more to make it good.

THE pleasure which affects the human mind with the most lively and transporting touches, is the sense that we act in the eye of infinite wisdom, power, and goodness, that will crown our virtuous endeavours here with a happiness hereafter, large as our desires, and lasting as our immortal souls; without this the highest state of life is insipid, and with it the lowest is a paradise.

C H A P. V.

HONOURABLE age is not that which standeth in length of time, nor that is measured by number of years; but wisdom is the grey hair unto man, and unspotted life is old age.

WICKEDNESS, condemned by her own witness, is very timorous, and being pressed with conscience, always forecasteth evil things; for fear is nothing else, but a betraying of the succours which reason offereth.

A WISE man will fear in every thing. He that contemneth small things shall fall by little and little.

A RICH man beginning to fall is held up of his friends; but a poor man being down is thrust away by his friends: when a rich man is fallen he hath many helpers; he speaketh things not to be spoken, and yet men justify him; the poor man slip and they rebuked him; he spoke wisely, and could have no place. When a rich man speaketh, every man holdeth his tongue, and, look, what he saith they extol it to the clouds; but if a poor man speak, they say, what fellow is this?

MANY have fallen by the edge of the sword, but not so many as have fallen by the tongue. Well is he that is defended from it, and hath not passed through the venom thereof; who hath not drawn the yoke thereof, nor been bound in her bonds; for the yoke thereof is a yoke of iron, and the bands thereof are bands of brags; the death thereof is an evil death.

MY son, blemish not thy good deeds, neither use uncomfortable words, when thou givest any thing. Shall not the dew assuage the heat? so is a word better than a gift. Lo, is not a word better than a gift? but both are with a gracious man.

BLAME not, before thou hast examined the truth; understand first, and then rebuke.

IF thou wouldest get a friend, prove him first, and be not hasty to credit him; for some men are friends for their own occasions, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble.

FORSAKE not an old friend, for the new is not comparable to him: a new friend is as new wine; when it is old thou shalt drink it with pleasure.

A FRIEND cannot be known in prosperity; and an enemy cannot be hidden in adversity.

ADMONISH thy friend; it may be, he hath not done it; and if he have, that he do it no more. Admonish thy friend; it may be, he hath not said it, or if he have, that he speak it not again. Admonish a friend; for many times it is a slander; and believe not every tale. There is one that slippeth in his speech, but not from his heart; and who is he that hath not offended with his tongue?

WHOSO discovereth secrets loseth his credit, and shall never find a friend to his mind.

HONOUR thy father with thy whole heart, and forget not the sorrows of thy mother: how canst thou recompense them the things that they have done for thee?

THERE is nothing so much worth as a mind well instructed.

THE lips of talkers will be telling such things as pertain not to them; but the words of such as have understanding are weighed in the ballance. The heart of fools is in their mouth, but the tongue of the wise is in their heart.

To labour, and to be content with that a man hath, is a sweet life.

BE in peace with many; nevertheless, have but one counsellor of a thousand.

BE not confident in a plain way.

LET reason go before every enterprize, and counsel before every action.

C H A P. VI.

THE latter part of a wise man's life is taking up in curing the follies, prejudices, and false opinions he had contracted in the former.

CENSURE is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent.

VERY few men properly speaking live at present, but are providing to live another time.

PARTY is the madness of many, for the gain of a few.

To endeavour to work upon the vulgar with fine sense, is like attempting to hew blocks of marble with a razor.

SUPERSTITION is the spleen of the soul.

HE who tells a lie is not sensible how great a task he undertakes; for he must be forced to invent twenty more to maintain that one.

SOME people will never learn any thing, for this reason, because they understand every thing too soon.

THERE is nothing wanting to make all rational and disinterested people in the world of one religion, but that they should talk together every day.

MEN

MEN are grateful, in the same degree that they are resentful.

YOUNG men are subtle arguers ; the cloak of honour covers all their faults, as that of passion, all their follies.

OECONOMY is no disgrace ; it is better living on a little, than out-living a great deal.

NEXT to the satisfaction I receive in the prosperity of an honest man, I am best pleased with the confusion of a rascal.

WHAT is often termed shyness, is nothing more than refined sense, and an indifference to common observations.

THE higher character a person supports, the more he should regard his minutest actions.

EVERY person insensibly fixes upon some degree of refinement in his discourse, some measure of thought which he thinks worth exhibiting. It is wise to fix this pretty high, although it occasions one to talk the less.

TO endeavour all one's days to fortify our minds with learning and philosophy, is to spend so much in armour, that one has nothing left to defend.

DEFERENCE often shrinks and withers as much upon the approach of intimacy, as the sensitive plant does upon the touch of one's finger.

MEN are sometimes accused of pride, merely because their accusers would be proud themselves if they were in their places.

PEOPLE frequently use this expression, I am inclined to think so and so, not considering that they are then speaking the most literal of all truths.

MODESTY makes large amends for the pain it gives the persons who labour under it, by the prejudice it affords every worthy person in their favour.

THE difference there is betwixt honour and honesty seems to be chiefly in the motive. The honest man does that from duty, which the man of honour does for the sake of character.

A LIAR begins with making falsehood appear like truth, and ends with making truth itself appear like falsehood.

VIRTUE should be considered as a part of taste ; and we should as much avoid deceit, or sinister meaning in discourse, as we would puns, bad language, or false grammar.

C H A P. VII.

DEFERENCE is the most complicate, the most indirect, and the most elegant of all compliments.

HE that lies in bed all a summer's morning, loses the chief pleasure of the day : he that gives up his youth to indolence, undergoes a loss of the same kind.

SHINING characters are not always the most agreeable ones. The mild radiance of an emerald, is by no means less pleasing than the glare of the ruby.

To be at once a rake and to glory in the character, discovers at the same time a bad disposition, and a bad taste.

How is it possible to expect that mankind will take advice, when they will not so much as take warning ?

ALTHOUGH men are accused for not knowing their own weakness, yet perhaps as few know their own strength. It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of.

FINE sense and exalted sense are not half so valuable as common sense. There are forty men of wit for one man of sense ; and he that will carry nothing about him but gold, will be every day at a loss for want of ready change.

LEARNING is like mercury, one of the most powerful and excellent things in the world in skilful hands ; in unskilful, most mischievous.

A MAN should never be ashamed to own he has been been in the wrong ; which is but saying, in other words, that he is wiser to day than he was yesterday.

WHEREVER I find a great deal of gratitude in a poor man, I take it for granted there would be as much generosity if he were a rich man.

FLOWERS of rhetoric in sermons or serious discourses, are like the blue and red flowers in corn, pleasing to those who come only for amusement, but prejudicial to him who would reap the profit.

It often happens that those are the best people, whose characters have been most injured by slanderers ; as we usually find that to be the sweetest fruit, which the birds have been pecking at.

THE eye of a critic is often like a microscope, made so very fine and nice, that it discovers the atoms, grains and minutest articles, without ever comprehending the whole, comparing the parts, or seeing all at once the harmony.

MEN's zeal for religion is much of the same kind as that which they shew for a foot-ball ; whenever it is contested for, every one is ready to venture their lives and limbs in the dispute ; but when that is once at an end, it is no more thought on, but sleeps in oblivion, buried in rubbish, which no one thinks it worth his pains to rake into, much less to remove.

HONOUR is but a fictitious kind of honesty ; a mean but necessary substitute for it, in societies who have none : it is a sort of paper credit, with which men are obliged to trade, who are deficient in the sterling cash of true morality and religion.

PERSONS of great delicacy should know the certainty of the following truth : there are abundance of cases which occasion suspense, in which whatever they determine they will repent of their determination ; and this through a propensity of human nature to fancy happiness in those schemes which it does not pursue.

THE chief advantage that ancient writers can boast

boast over modern ones seems owing to simplicity. Every noble truth and sentiment was expressed by the former in a natural manner, in word and phrase simple, perspicuous, and incapable of improvements. What then remained for latter writers, but affectation, witticism, and conceit?

C H A P. VIII.

WHAT a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a God.

IF to do, were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches, and poor men's cottages princes palaces. He is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching.

MEN's evil manners live in brass; their virtues we write in water.

THE web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues.

THE sense of death is most in apprehension;
And the poor beetle that we tread upon,
In corporal suffrance feels a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

How far the little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

———Love all, trust a few,
Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy

Rather

Rather in power, than in use : keep thy friend
Under thine own life's key : be check'd for silence,
But never tax'd for speech.

THE cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Leave not a wreck behind ! we are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

OUR indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do fall ; and that should teach us,
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

THE poet's-eye in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven ;
And as imagination bodies forth
The form of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shape, and gives to airy nothing,
A local habitation and a name.

HEAVEN doth with us, as we with torches do,
Not light them for ourselves : for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues : nor nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use.

WHAT stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted?
Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just ;
And he but naked (tho' lock'd up in steel)
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

C H A P. IX.

O H, world, thy slippery turns! friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise
Are still together; who twine (as 'twere) in love
Inseparable; shall within this hour,
On a dissention of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues.

————— So it falls out,
That what we have we prize not to the worth,
While we enjoy it; but being lack'd and lost,
Why then we rate the value; then we find
The virtue that possession would not shew us
Whilst it was ours.

COWARDS die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

THERE is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out.
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers;
Which is both healthful, and good husbandry.
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all; admonishing,
That we should dress us fairly for our end.

O MOMENTARY grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in th' air of men's fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with every nod to tumble down,
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

— Who shall go about
To cozen fortune, and be honourable
Without the stamp of merit? Let none presume
To wear an undeserved dignity.
O that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not derived corruptly, that clear honour
Were purchased by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover that stand bare!
How many be commanded, that command!

OH, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast!
Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?
Oh, no! the apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse;
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

— — — 'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Kings, queens, and states,
Maids, matrons, nay the secrets of the grave,
This viperous slander enters.

THERE is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.

To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creeps in this petty space from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time,
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusky death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more! It is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

THE D E R V I S E.

A D E R V I S E, travelling through Tartary, being arrived at the town of Balk, went into the king's palace by mistake, as thinking it to be a publick inn or caravansary. Having looked about him for some time, he entered into a long gallery, where he laid down his wallet, and spread his carpet, in order to repose himself upon it after the manner of the eastern nations. He had not been long in this posture before he was discovered by some of the guards, who asked him what was his business in that place? The Dervise told them he intended to take up his night's lodging in that caravansary. The guards let him know, in a very angry manner, that the house he was in was not a caravansary, but the king's palace. It happened that the king himself passed through the gallery during this debate, and smiling at the mistake of the Dervise, asked him how he could possibly be so dull as not to distinguish a palace from a caravansary? Sir, says the Dervise, give me leave to ask your majesty a question or two. Who were the persons that lodged in this house when it was first built? The king replied, His ancestors. And who, says the Dervise, was the last person that lodged here? The king replied, plied, His father. And who is it, says the Dervise, that lodges here at present? The king told him, That it was himself. And who, says the Dervise, will be here after you? The king answered, The young prince his son. 'Ah sir, said the Dervise, a house that changes its inhabitants so often, and receives such a perpetual succession of guests, is not a palace but a caravanfary.'

WE are told that the Sultan Mahmoud, by his perpetual wars abroad, and his tyranny at home, had filled his dominions with ruin and desolation, and half unpeopled the Persian Empire. The Visier to this great Sultan (whether an humourist or an enthusiast, we are not informed) pretended to have learned of a certain Dervise to understand the language of birds, so that there was not a bird that could open his mouth, but the Visier knew what it was he said. As he was one evening with the emperor, in their return from hunting, they saw a couple of owls upon a tree that grew near an old wall out of a heap of rubbish. I would fain know, says the Sultan, what those two owls are saying to one another; listen to their discourse and give me an account of it. The Visier approached the tree, pretending to be very attentive to the two owls. Upon his return to the Sultan, Sir, says he, I have heard part of their conversation, but dare not tell you what it is. The Sultan would not be satisfied with such an answer, but forced him to repeat word for word every thing the owls had said. You must know then, said the Visier, that one of these owls has a son, and the other a daughter, between whom they are now upon a treaty of marriage. The father of the son said to the father of the daughter, in my hearing, brother, I consent to this marriage, provided you will settle upon your daughter fifty ruined villages for her portion. To which the father of the daughter replied, instead of fifty I will give her five hundred if you please. God grant a long life to Sultan Mahmoud; whilst he reigns over us, we shall never want ruined villages.

THE story says, the Sultan was so touched with the fable, that he rebuilt the towns and villages which had been destroyed, and from that time forward consulted the good of his people.

THERE were two very powerful tyrants engaged in a perpetual war against each other: the name of the first was Luxury, and of the second Avarice. The aim of each of them was no less than universal monarchy over the hearts of mankind. Luxury had many generals under him, who did him great service, as Pleasure, Mirth, Pomp, and Fashion. Avarice was likewise very strong in his officers, being faithfully served by Hunger, Industry, Care and Watchfulness: he had likewise a privy-counsellor who was always at his elbow, and whispering something or other in his ear: the name of this privy-counsellor was Poverty. As Avarice conducted himself by the counsels of Poverty, his antagonist was entirely guided by the dictates and advice of Plenty, who was his first counsellor and minister of state, that concerted all his measures for him, and never departed out of his sight. While these two great rivals were thus contending for empire, their conquests were very various, Luxury got possession of one heart, and Avarice of another. The father of a family would often range himself under the banners of Avarice, and the son under those of Luxury.

ry. The wife and husband would often declare themselves on the two different parties; nay, the same person would very often side with one in his youth, and revolt to the other in his old age. Indeed the wise men of the world stood neuter; but, alas, their numbers were not considerable. At length when these two potentates had wearied themselves with waging war upon one another, they agreed upon an interview, at which neither of their counsellors were to be present. It is said that Luxury began the parley, and after having represented the endless state of war in which they were engaged, told his enemy, with a frankness of heart which is natural to him, that he believed they two should be very good friends, were it not for the instigations of Poverty, that pernicious counsellor, who made an ill use of his ear, and filled him with groundless apprehensions and prejudices. To this Avarice replied, that he looked upon Plenty (the first minister of his antagonist) to be a much more destructive counsellor than Poverty, for that he was perpetually suggesting pleasures, banishing all the necessary cautions against want, and consequently undermining those principles on which the government of Avarice was founded. At last, in order to an accommodation, they agreed upon this preliminary; that each of them should immediately dismiss his privy-counsellor. When things were thus far adjusted towards a peace, all other differences were soon accommodated, insomuch that for the future they resolved to live as good friends and confederates, and to share between them whatever conquests were made on either side. For this reason we now find Luxury and Avarice taking possession of the same heart, and dividing the same person between them. To which I shall only add, that since the discarding of the counsellors above-mentioned, Avarice supplies Luxury in the room of Plenty, as Luxury prompts Avarice in the place of Poverty.

THERE were two families which from the beginning of the world were as opposite to each other as light and darkness. The one of them lived in heaven, and the other in hell. The youngest descendant of the first family was Pleasure, who was the daughter of Happiness, who was the child of Virtue, who was the off-spring of the Gods. These, as I said before, had their habitation in heaven. The youngest of the opposite family was Pain, who was the son of Misery, who was the child of Vice, who was the off-spring of the Furies. The habitation of this race of beings was in hell.

THE middle station of nature between these two opposite extremes was the earth, which was inhabited by creatures of a middle kind, neither so virtuous as the one, nor so vicious as the other, but partaking of the good and bad qualities of these two opposite families. Jupiter considering that this species commonly called man, was too virtuous to be miserable, and too vicious to be happy; that he might make a distinction between the good and the bad, ordered the two youngest of the above-mentioned families, Pleasure who was the daughter of Happiness, and Pain who was the son of Misery, to meet one another upon this part of nature which lay in the half-way between them, having promised to settle it upon them both, provided they could agree upon the division of it, so as to share mankind between them.

PLEASURE and Pain were no sooner met in their new habitation, but they immediately agreed upon this point, that Pleasure should take possession of the virtuous, and Pain of the vicious part of that species which was given up to them. But upon examining to which of them any individual they met with belonged, they found each of them had a right to him; for that, contrary to what they had seen in their old places of residence, there was no person so vicious who had not some good in him, nor any person so virtuous who had not in him some evil. The truth of it is, they generally found upon search, that in the most vicious man Pleasure might lay a claim to an hundredth part, and that in the most virtuous man Pain might come in for at least two thirds. This they saw would occasion endless disputes between them, unless they could come to some accommodation. To this end there was a marriage proposed between them, and at length concluded: by this means it is that we find Pleasure and Pain are such constant yoke-fellows, and that they either make their visits together, or are never far asunder. If Pain comes into a heart, he is quickly followed by Pleasure; and if Pleasure enters, you may be sure Pain is not far off.

BUT notwithstanding this marriage was very convenient for the two parties, it did not seem to answer the intention of Jupiter in sending them among mankind. To remedy therefore this inconvenience, it was stipulated between them by article, and confirmed by the consent of each family, that notwithstanding they here possessed the species indifferently; upon the death of every single person, if he was found to have in him a certain proportion of evil, he should be dispatched into the infernal regions by a passport from Pain, there to dwell with Misery, Vice, and the Furies. Or on the contrary, if he had in him a certain proportion of good, he should be dispatched into heaven by a passport from Pleasure, there to dwell with Happiness, Virtue, and the Gods.

LABOUR, the off-spring of Want, and the mother of Health and Contentment, lived with her two daughters in a little cottage, by the side of a hill, at a great distance from town. They were totally unacquainted with the great, and had kept no better company than the neighbouring villagers; but having a desire of seeing the world, they forsook their companions and habitation, and determined to travel. Labour went soberly along the road with Health on her right hand, who by the sprightliness of her conversation and songs of cheerfulness and joy, softened the toils of the way; while Contentment went smiling on the left, supporting the steps of her mother, and by her perpetual good-humour increasing the vivacity of her sister.

IN this manner they travelled over forests and through towns and villages, till at last they arrived at the capital of the kingdom. At their entrance into the great city, the mother conjured her daughters never to lose sight of her; for it was the will of Jupiter, she said, that their separation should be attended with the utter ruin of all three. But Health was of too gay a disposition to regard the counsels of Labour: she suffered herself to be debauched by Intemperance, and at last died in child-birth of Disease. Contentment, in the absence of her sister, gave herself up to the enticement of Sloth, and was never heard of after: while Labour, who could have no enjoyment without her daughters, went every where in search of them, till she was at last seized by Languor in her way, and died in misery.

THE OLD MAN AND HIS ASS.

AN old man and a little boy were driving an ass to the next market to sell. What a fool is this fellow (says a man upon the road) to be trudging it on foot with his son, that his ass may go light! The old man, hearing this, set his boy upon the ass, and went whistling by the side of him. Why, sirrah! (cries a second man to the boy) is it fit for you to be riding, while your poor old father is walking on foot? The father, upon this rebuke, took down his boy from the ass, and mounted himself. Do you see (says a third) how the lazy old knave rides along upon his beast, while his poor little boy is almost crippled with walking? The old man no sooner heard this, than he took up his son behind him. Pray, honest friend (says a fourth) is that ass your own? Yes, says the man. One would not have thought so, replied the other, by your loading him so unmercifully. You and your son are better able to carry the poor beast than he you. Any thing to please, says the owner; and alighting with his son, they tied the legs of the ass together, and by the help of a pole endeavoured to carry him upon their shoulders over the bridge that led to the town. This was so entertaining a sight, that the people ran in crowds to laugh at it; till the ass, conceiving a dislike to the over complaisance of his master, burst asunder the cords that tied him, slipped from the pole, and tumbled into the river. The poor old man made the best of his way home, ashamed and vexed that by endeavouring to please every body, he had pleased nobody, and lost his ass into the bargain.

HERCULES'S CHOICE.

WHEN Hercules was in that part of his youth, in which it was natural for him to consider what course of life he ought to pursue, he one day retired into a desert, where the silence and solitude of the place very much favoured his meditations. As he was musing on his present condition, and very much perplexed in himself on the state of life he should chuse, he saw two women of a larger stature than ordinary approaching towards him. One of them had a very noble air, and graceful deportment; her beauty was natural and easy, her person clean and unspotted, her eyes cast towards the ground with an agreeable reserve, her motion and behaviour full of modesty, and her raiment as white as snow. The other had a great deal of health and floridness in her countenance, which she had helped with an artificial white and red; and endeavoured to appear more graceful than ordinary in her mein, by a mixture of affectation in all her gestures. She had a wonderful confidence and assurance in her looks, and all the variety of colours in her dress that she thought were the most proper to shew her complexion to advantage. She cast her eyes upon herself, then turned them on those that were present, to see how they liked her, and often looked on the figure she made in her own shadow. Upon her nearer approach to Hercules, she stepped before the other lady, who came forward with a regular composed carriage, and running up to him, accosted him after the following manner.

My dear Hercules, says she, I find you are very much divided in your own thoughts upon the way of life that you ought to chuse: be my friend, and follow me; I will lead you into the possession of pleasure, and out of the reach of pain, and remove you from all the noise and disquietude of business. The affairs of either war or peace shall have no power to disturb you. Your whole employment shall be to make your life easy, and to entertain every sense with its proper gratification. Sumptuous tables, beds of roses, clouds of perfumes, concerts of music, crouds of beauties, are all in readiness to receive you. Come along with me into this region of delights, this world of pleasure, and bid farewell for ever to care, to pain, to business:

HERCULES hearing the lady talk after this manner, desired to know her name; to which she answered, my friends, and those who are well acquainted with me, call me Happiness; but my enemies and those who would injure my reputation, have given me the name of Pleasure.

By this time the other lady was come up, who addressed herself to the young hero in a very different manner.

HERCULES, says she, I offer myself to you, because I know you are descended from the Gods, and give proofs of that descent by your love to virtue, and application to the studies proper for your age. This makes me hope you will gain both for yourself and me an immortal reputation. But, before I invite you into my society and friendship, I will be open and sincere with you, and must lay down this as an established truth, that there is nothing truly valuable which can be purchased without pains and labour. The Gods have set a price upon every real and noble pleasure. If you would gain the favour of the Deity, you must be at the pains of worshipping him; if the friendship of good men, you must study to oblige them; if you would be honoured by your country, you must take care to serve it. In short, if you would be eminent in war or peace, you must become master of all the qualifications that can make you so. These are the only terms and conditions upon which I can propose happiness. The Goddess of pleasure here broke in upon her discourse: you see, see, said she, Hercules, by her own confession, the way to her pleasures is long and difficult, whereas that which I propose is short and easy. Alas! said the other lady, whose visage glowed with passion, made up of scorn and pity, what are the pleasures you propose? To eat before you are hungry, drink before you are athirst, sleep before you are tired, to gratify appetites before they are raised, and raise such appetites as nature never planted. You never heard the most delicious music, which is the praise of one's self; nor saw the most beautiful object, which is the work of one's own hands. Your votaries pass away their youth is a dream of mistaken pleasures, while they are hoarding up anguish, torment, and remorse, for old age.

As for me, I am the friend of Gods and of good men, an agreeable companion to the artizan, an household guardian to the fathers of families, a patron and protector of servants, an associate in all true and generous friendships. The banquets of my votaries are never costly, but always delicious; for none eat or drink at them who are not invited by hunger and thirst. Their slumbers are sound, and their wakings chearful. My young men have the pleasure of hearing themselves praised by those who are in years; and those who are in years, of being honoured by those who are young. In a word, my followers are favoured by the Gods, beloved by their acquaintance, esteemed by their country, and after the close of their labours honoured by posterity.

We know by the life of this memorable hero, to which of these two ladies he gave up his heart: and I believe, every one who reads this will do him the justice to approve his choice.

P I T Y.

IN the happy period of the golden age, when all the celestial inhabitants descended to the earth, and conversed familiarly with mortals, among the most cherished of the heavenly powers were twins, the off-spring of Jupiter, LOVE and JOY. Wherever they appeared, the flowers sprang up beneath their feet, the sun shone with a brighter radiance, and all nature seemed embellished by their presence. They were inseparable companions, and their growing attachment was favoured by Jupiter, who had decreed that a lasting union should be solemnized between them so soon as they were arrived at maturer years. But in the mean time the sons of men deviated from their native innocence; vice and ruin over-ran the earth with giant strides; and Astrea with her train of celestial visitants forsook their polluted abodes. Love alone remained, having been stolen away by Hope, who was his nurse, and conveyed by her to the forests of Arcadia, where he was brought up among the shepherds. But Jupiter assigned him a different partner, and commanded him to espouse SORROW, the daughter of Atè. He complied with reluctance; for her features were harsh and disagreeable, her eyes sunk, her forehead contracted into perpetual wrinkles, and her temples were covered with a wreath of cypress and wormwood. From this union sprang a virgin, in whom might be traced a strong resemblance to both her parents; but the sullen and unamiable features of her mother were so mixed and blended with the sweetness of her father, that her countenance, though mournful, was highly pleasing. The maids and shepherds of the neighbouring plains gathered round and called her PITY. A redbreast was observed to build in the cabin where she was born; and while she was yet an infant, a dove pursued by a hawk flew into her bosom. This nymph had a dejected appearance, but so soft and gentle a mien that she was beloved to a degree of enthusiasm. Her voice was low and plaintive, but inexpressibly sweet; and she loved to lie four hours together on the banks of some wild and melancholy stream, singing to her lute. She taught men to weep, for she took a strange delight in tears; and often, when the virgins of the hamlet were assembled at their evening sports, she would steal in amongst them, and captivate their hearts by her tales full of a charming sadness. She wore on her head a garland composed of her father's myrtles twisted with her mother's cypresses.

ONE day, as she sat musing by the waters of Helicon, her tears by chance fell into the fountain; and ever since, the Muses' spring has obtained a strong taste of the infusion. Pity was commanded by Jupiter to follow the steps of her mother through the world, dropping balm into the wounds she made, and binding up the hearts she had broken. She follows with her hair loose, her bosom bare and throbbing, her garments torn by the briars, and her feet bleeding with the roughness of the path. The nymph is mortal, for her mother is so; and when she has fulfilled her destined course upon the earth, they shall both expire together, and LOVE be again united to JOY, his immortal and long betrothed bride.

THE DEAD ASS.

AND this, said he, putting the remains of a crust into his wallet—and this should have been thy portion, said he, hadst thou been alive to have shared with me. I thought by the accent, it had been an apostrophe to his child; but it was to his ass, and to the very ass we had seen dead in the road, which had occasioned La Fleur's misadventure. The man seemed to lament it much; and it instantly brought into my mind Sancho's lamentation for his; but he did it with more true touches of nature.

THE mourner was sitting upon a stone bench at the door, with the ass's pannel and its bridle on one side, which he took up from time to time—then laid them down—looked at them, and shook his head. He then took his crust of bread out of his wallet again, as if to eat it; held it some time in his hand—then laid it upon the bit of his ass's bridle—looked wistfully at the little arrangement he had made—and gave a sigh.

THE simplicity of his grief drew numbers about him, and La Fleur among the rest, whilst the horses were getting ready; as I continued sitting in the post-chaise, I could see and hear over their heads.

HE said he had come last from Spain, where he had been from the furthest borders of Franconia? and had got so far on his return home, when his ass died. Every one seemed desirous to know what business could have taken so old and a poor a man so far a journey from his own home.

IT had pleased heaven, he said, to bless him with three sons, the finest lads in all Germany; but having in one week lost two of them by the small-pox, and the youngest falling ill of the same distemper, he was afraid of being bereft of them all; and made a vow, if Heaven would not take him from him also he would go in gratitude to St. Iago in Spain.

WHEN the mourner got thus far in his story, he stopp'd to pay nature her tribute—and wept bitterly.

HE said Heaven had accepted the conditions; and that he had set out from his cottage with this poor creature, who had been a patient partner of his journey—that it had eat the same bread with him all the way, and was unto him as a friend.

EVERY body who stood about him, heard the poor fellow with concern—La Fleur offered him money.

—The mourner said he did not want it—it was not the value of the ass—but the loss of him.—The ass, he said, he was assured, loved him—and upon this told them a long story of a mischance upon their passage over the Pyrenean mountains which had separated them from each other three days: during which time the ass had fought him as much as he had fought the ass, and that they had neither scarce eat or drank till they met.

THOU hast one comfort, friend, said I, at least in the loss of thy poor beast: I am sure thou hast been a merciful master to him.—Alas! said the mourner, I thought so, when he was alive—but now he is dead I think otherwise.—I fear the weight of myself and my afflictions together have been too much for him—they have shortened the poor creature's days, and I fear I have them to answer for.—Shame on the world! said I to myself—Did we love each other, as this poor soul but loved his ass—t'would be something.—

THE SWORD.

WHEN states and empires have their periods of declension, and feel in their turns what distress and poverty is—I stop not to tell the causes which gradually brought the house d'E* in Britany into decay. The Marquis d'E* had fought up against his condition with great firmness: wishing to preserve and still shew to the world some little fragments of what his ancestors had been—their indiscretions had put it out of his power. There was enough left for the little exigencies of obscurity—But he had two boys who looked up to him for light—he thought they deserved it. He had tried his sword—it could not open the way—the mounting was too expensive—and simple œconomy was not a match for it—there was no resource but commerce.

IN any other province in France, save Britany, this was smiting the root for ever of the little tree his pride and affection wished to see re-blossom—But in Britany, there being provision for this, he availed himself of it, and taking an occasion when the states were assembled at Rennes, the Marquis, attending with his two sons, entered the court: and having pleaded the right of an antient law of the duchy, which, though seldom claimed, he said, was no less in force: he took his sword from his side—Here—said he—take it; and be trusty Guardians of it, till better times put me in condition to reclaim it.

THE president accepted the Marquis's sword—he stayed a few minutes to see it deposited in the archives of his house—and departed.

THE Marquis and his whole family embarked on the next day for Martinico, and in about nineteen or twenty years of successful application to business, with some unlooked for bequest from distant branches of this house—returned home to reclaim his nobility, and to support it.

IT was an incident of good fortune which will never happen to any traveller, but a sentimental one, that I should be at Rennes at the very time of this solemn requisition: I call it solemn—it was so to me.

THE Marquis entered the court with his whole family; he supported his lady—his eldest son supported his sister, and his youngest was at the other extreme of the line next his mother—he put his handkerchief to his face twice—

—THERE was a dead silence. When the Marquis had approached within six paces of the tribunal, he gave the Marchioness to his youngest son, and advancing three steps before his family—he reclaimed his sword—His sword was given him, and the moment he got it into his hand he drew it almost out of the scabbard—it was the shining face of a friend he had once given up. He looked attentively a long time at it, beginning at the hilt, as if to see whether it

it was the same—when observing a little rust which it had contracted near the point, he brought it near his eye, and bending his head down over it—I think I saw a tear fall upon the place : I could not be deceived by what followed.

“ I SHALL find, said he, some other way, to get “ it off.”

WHEN the Marquis had said this, he returned his sword into his scabbard, made a bow to the guardian of it—and with his wife and daughter and his two sons following him, walked out.

O how I envied him his feelings !

M A R I A.

FIRST PART.

—THEY were the sweetest notes I ever heard ; and I instantly let down the foreglass to hear them more distinctly——’Tis Maria, said the postilion, observing I was listening——Poor Maria, continued he, (leaning his body on one side to let me see her, for he was in a line betwixt us) is sitting upon a bank playing her vespers upon her pipe, with her little goat beside her.

THE young fellow uttered this with an accent and a look so perfectly in tune to a feeling heart, that I instantly made a vow, I would give him a four and twenty sous piece, when I got to Moulins——

——AND who is poor Maria ? said I.

THE love and pity of all the villages around us, said the postilion——it is but three years ago, that the sun did not shine upon so fair, so quick-witted and amiable a maid ; a better fate did Maria deserve, than to have her bands forbid by the intrigues of the curate of the parish who published them——

HE was going on, when Maria, who had made a short pause, put the pipe to her mouth and began the air again—they were the same notes ;—yet were ten times sweeter : It is the evening service to the Virgin, said the young man——but who has taught her to play it—or how she came by her pipe, no one knows ; we think that Heaven has assisted her in both ; for ever since she has been unsettled in her mind, it seems her only consolation—she has never once had the pipe out of her hand, but plays that service upon it almost night and day.

THE postilion delivered this with so much discretion and natural eloquence, that I could not help decyphering something in his face above his condition, and should have sifted out his history, had not poor Maria's taken such full possession of me.

WE had got up by this time almost to the bank where Maria was sitting : she was in a thin white jacket, with her hair, all but two tresses, drawn up into a silk net, with a few olive leaves twisted a little fantastically on one side——she was beautiful ; and if ever I felt the full force of an honest heart-ach, it was the moment I saw her——

—God help her ! poor damsel ! above a hundred masses, said the postilion, have been said in the several parish churches and convents around, for her,——but without effect ; we have still hopes, as she is sensible for short intervals, that the Virgin at last will restore her to herself ; but her parents, who know her best, are hopeless upon that score, and think her senses are lost for ever.

As the postilion spoke this, Maria made a cadence so melancholy, so tender and querulous, that I sprung out of the chaise to help her, and found myself sitting betwixt her and her goat before I relapsed from my enthusiasm.

MARIA looked wishfully for some time at me, and then at her goat—and then at me—and then at her goat again, and so on, alternately——

—WELL, Maria, said I softly—What resemblance do you find ?

I do intreat the candid reader to believe me, that it was from the humblest conviction of what a beast man is—that I asked the question; and that I would not have let fallen an unseasonable pleasantry in the venerable presence of Miliery, to be entitled to all the wit that ever Rabelais scattered.

ADIEU, Maria!—adieu, poor hapless damsel!—some time, but not now, I may hear thy sorrows from thy own lips—but I was deceived; for that moment she took her pipe, and told me such a tale of woe with it, that I rose up, and with broken and irregular steps walked softly to my chaise.

WHEN we had got within half a league of Moulines, at a little opening in the road leading to a thicket, I discovered poor Maria sitting under a poplar—she was sitting with her elbow in her lap, and her head leaning on one side within her hand—a small brook ran at the foot of the tree.

I BID the postilion go on with the chaise to Moulines—and La Fleur to bespeak my supper—and that I would walk after him.

SHE was dressed in white, and much as my friend described her, except that her hair hung loose, which before was twisted within a silk net. She had, super-added likewise to her jacket, a pale green ribband which fell across her shoulder to the waist; at the end of which hung her pipe. Her goat had been as faithless as her lover; and she had got a little dog in lieu of him, which she had kept tied by a string to her girdle; as looking at her dog, she drew him towards her with the string—"Thou shalt not leave me, Sylvio," said she. I looked in Maria's eyes, and saw she was thinking more of her father than of her lover or her little goat; for as she uttered them the tears trickled down her cheeks.

I SAT down close by her; and Maria let me wipe them away as they fell, with my handkerchief. I then steeped it in my own—and then in hers—and then in mine—and then I wiped hers again—and as I did it, I felt undescribable emotions within me, as I am sure could not be accounted for from any combinations of matter and motion.

I AM positive I have a soul : nor can all the books with which materialists have pestered the world ever convince me of the contrary.

WHEN Maria had come a little to herself, I asked her if she remembered a pale thin person of a man, who had sat down betwixt her and her goat about two years before ? She said she was unsettled much at that time, but remembered it upon two accounts—that ill as she was she saw the person pitied her ; and next, that her goat had stolen his handkerchief, and she had beat him for the theft—she had washed it, she said, in the brook, and kept it ever since in her pocket, to restore it to him in case she should ever see him again, which she added, he had half promised her. As she told me this, she took the handkerchief out of her pocket to let me see it ; she had folded it up neatly in a couple of vine leaves, tied round with a tendril—on opening it I saw an S marked in one of the corners.

SHE had since that, she told me, strayed as far as Rome, and walked round St. Peter's once—and returned back—that she found her way alone across the Apennines—had travelled over all Lombardy without money—and through the flinty roads of Savoy without shoes—how she had borne it, and how she had got supported, she could not tell—but God tempers the wind, said Maria, to the shorn lamb.

SHORN indeed ! and to the quick, said I : and wast thou in my own land, where I have a cottage, I would take thee to it and shelter thee ; thou shouldst eat of my own bread, and drink of my own cup. I would be kind to thy Sylvic—in all thy weaknesses and wanderings I would seek after thee and bring thee back—when the sun went down I would say my prayers, and when I had done, thou shouldst play thy evening song upon thy pipe, nor would the incense of my sacrifice be worse accepted for entering heaven along with that of a broken heart.

NATURE.

NATURE melted within me as I uttered this ; and Maria observing, as I took out my handkerchief, that it was steeped too much already to be of use, would needs go wash it in the stream. And where will you dry it, Maria ? said I—I will dry it in my bosom, said she—it will do me good.

AND is your heart still so warm, Maria ? said I.

I TOUCHED upon the string on which hung all her sorrows—she looked with wistful disorder for some time in my face ; and then, without saying any thing, took her pipe, and played her service to the Virgin—The string I had touched ceased to vibrate—in a moment or two Maria returned to herself—let her pipe fall—and rose up.

AND where are you going, Maria ? said I.—She said, to Moulines.—Let us go, said I, together.—Maria put her arm within mine, and lengthening the string, to let the dog follow—in that order we entered Moulines.

THOUGH I hate salutations and greetings in the market place, yet when we got into the middle of this, I stopped to take my last look and last farewell of Maria.

MARIA, though not tall, was nevertheless of the first order of fine forms——affliction had touched her looks with something that was scarce earthly—still she was feminine—and so much was there about her of all that the heart wishes, or the eye looks for in woman, that could the traces be ever worn out of her brain, and those of Eliza's out of mine, she should not only eat of my bread and drink of my own cup, but Maria should lie in my bosom, and be unto me as a daughter.

ADIEU, poor luckless maiden ! — imbibe the oil and wine which the compassion of a stranger, as he journieth on his way, now pours into thy wounds—the Being who has twice bruised thee can only bind them up for ever.

OFT has it been my lot to mark
 A proud, conceited, talking spark,
 With eyes, that hardly serv'd at most
 To guard their master 'gainst a post,
 Yet round the world the blade has been
 To see whatever could be seen,
 Returning from his finish'd tour,
 Grown ten times perter than before ;
 Whatever word you chance to drop,
 The travell'd fool your mouth will stop,
 " Sir, if my judgment you'll allow—
 " I've seen—and sure I ought to know"—
 So begs you'd pay a due submission,
 And acquiesce in his decision.

Two travellers of such a cast,
 As o'er Arabia's wilds they past,
 And on their way in friendly chat
 Now talk'd of this and then of that,
 Discours'd awhile, mongst other matter,
 Of the Camelion's form and nature,
 " A stranger animal cries one,
 " Sure never liv'd beneath the sun :
 " A lizard's body lean and long,
 " A fish's head, a serpent's tongue,
 " Its tooth with triple claw disjoin'd ;
 " And what a length of tail behind !
 " How slow its pace ! and then its hue—
 " Who ever saw so fine a blue ?"

" Hold there, the other quick replies,
 " 'Tis green—I saw it with these eyes,
 " As late with open mouth it lay,
 " And warm'd it in the sunny ray ;
 " Stretch'd at its ease the beast I view'd,
 " And saw it eat the air for food."

" I've seen it, Sir, as well as you,
 " And must again affirm it blue.

" At leisure I the beast survey'd ;
 " Extended in the cooling shade."
 " 'Tis green, 'tis green, Sir, I assure ye"——
 " Green ! cries the other in a fury——
 " Why, Sir——d'ye think I've lost my eyes ?"
 " 'Twere no great loss, the friend replies,
 " For, if they always serve you thus,
 " You'll find 'em but of little use,"
 So high at last the contest rose,
 From words they almost came to blows :
 When luckily came by a third——
 To him the question they referr'd ;
 And begg'd he'd tell him, if he knew,
 Whether the thing was green or blue,
 " Sirs, cries the umpire, cease your pother——
 " The creature's neither one nor t'other.
 " I caught the animal last night,
 " And view'd it o'er by candle-light :
 " I mark'd it well——'twas black as jet——
 " You stare—but Sirs, I've got it yet,
 " And can produce it." " Pray, Sir, do,
 " I'll lay my life, the thing is blue,"
 " And I'll be sworn, that when you've seen
 " The reptile, you'll pronounce him green."
 " Well then, at once to ease the doubt,
 " Replies the man, I'll turn him out :
 " And when before your eyes I've set him,
 " If you don't find him black, I'll eat him."
 He said ; then full before their sight
 Produc'd the beast, and lo !——'twas white.—
 Both star'd, the man look'd wond'rous wise——
 " My children," the Camelion cries,
 (Then first the creature found a tongue)
 " You all are right, and all are wrong
 " When next you talk of what you view,
 " Think others see as well as you :
 " Nor wonder, if you find that none
 " Prefers your eye-sight to his own."

THE YOUTH AND THE PHILOSOPHER.

A GRECIAN Youth, of talents rare,
Whom Pláto's philosophic care
Had form'd for virtue's nobler view,
By precept and example too,
Wou'd often boast his matchless skill,
To curb the steed, and guide the wheel,
And as he pass'd the gazing throng,
With graceful ease, and smack'd the thong,
The idiot wonder they express'd
Was praise and transport to his breast.

At length quite vain, he needs would shew
His master what his art could do ;
And bade his slave the chariot lead
To Academus sacred shade.

The trembling groves confess'd its fright,
The wood-nymphs started at the sight :
The Muses drop the learned lyre,
And to their inmost shades retire !
Howe'er the youth with forward air,
Bows to the sage, and mounts the car,
The lash resounds, the coursers spring,
The chariot marks the rolling ring,
And gath'ring crowds with eager eyes,
And shouts, pursue him as he flies,

Triumphant to the goal return'd,
With nobler thirst his bosom burn'd ;
And now along th' indented plain,
The self-same track he marks again,
Pursues with care the nice design,
Nor ever deviates from the line.

Amazement seiz'd the circling crowd ;
The youths with emulation glow'd ;
Ev'n bearded sages hail'd the boy,
And all, but Plato, gaz'd with joy,
For he, deep-judging sage, beheld
With pain the triumphs of the field :

And

And when the charioteer drew nigh,
 And, flush'd with hope, had caught his eye,
 Alas ! unhappy youth, he cry'd,
 Expect no praise from me, (and sigh'd)
 With indignation I survey
 Such skill and judgment thrown away.
 The time profusely squander'd there,
 On vulgar arts beneath thy care,
 If well employed, at less expence,
 Had taught thee honour, virtue, sense,
 And rais'd thee from a coachman's fate
 To govern men, and guide the state.

WHITEHEAD.

C H A P. XIV.

SIR B A L A A M,

WHERE London's column, pointing at the skies,
 Like a tall bully, lifts the head, and lies ;
 There dwelt a Citizen of sober fame,
 A plain good man, and Balaam was his name ;
 Religious, punctual, frugal, and so forth ;
 His word would pass for more than he was worth.
 One solid dish his week-day meal affords,
 An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's :
 Constant at Church, and Change ; his gains were sure,
 His giving rare, save farthings to the poor.

The Devil was piqu'd such faintship to behold,
 And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old :
 But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
 And tempts by making rich, not making poor.

Rouz'd by the Prince of Air, the whirlwinds sweep
 The surge, and plunge his Father in the deep ;
 Then full against his Cornish lands they roar.
 And two rich shipwrecks bless the lucky shore.

SIR Balaam now, he lives like other folks,
 He takes his chirping pint, and cracks his jokes :
 " Live yourself," was soon my Lady's word ;
 And lo ! two puddings smoak'd upon the board.

Asleep

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
 An honest factor stole a Gem away :
 He pledg'd it to the knight ; the knight had wit,
 So kept the Di'mond, and the rogue was bit.
 Some scruple rose, but thus he eas'd his thought,
 " I'll now give six-pence where I gave a groat ;
 " Whereonce I went to church, I'll now go twice—
 " And am so clear too of all other vice."

The tempter saw his time ; the work he ply'd ;
 Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side,
 'Till all the Dæmon makes his full descent
 In one abundant show'r of Cent per Cent,
 Sinks deep within him, and possesses whole,
 Then dubs Director, and secures his soul.

Behold Sir Balaam now a man of spirit,
 Ascribes his gettings to his parts and merit ;
 What late he called a Blessing, now was Wit,
 And God's good Providence, a lucky Hit.
 Things change their titles, as our manners turn :
 His Compting-house employ'd the Sunday morn :
 Seldom at Church ('twas such a busy life)
 But duly sent his family and wife.
 There (so the Devil ordain'd) one Christmas-tide
 My good old Lady catch'd a cold, and dy'd.

A nymph of Quality admires our Knight ;
 He marries, bows at Court, and grows polite :
 Leaves the dull Cits, and joins (to please the Fair)
 The well-bred cuckolds in St. James's air :
 In Britain's Senate he a seat obtains,
 And one more Pensioner St. Stephen gains,
 My Lady falls to play ; so bad her chance,
 He must repair it ; takes a bribe from France,
 The House impeach him ; Coningsby harangues ;
 The court forsake him, and Sir Balaam hangs.
 Wife, son, and daughter, Satan ! are thy own,
 His wealth, yet dearer, forfeit to the Crown :
 The Devil and the King divide the prize,
 And sad Sir Balaam curses God and dies.

E D W I N A N D E M M A.

FAR in the windings of a vale, o
 Fast by a sheltering wood,
 The safe retreat of health and peace,
 A humble cottage stood.

There beauteous E M M A flourish'd fair
 Beneath a mother's eye,
 Whose only wish on earth was now
 To see her blest, and die.

The softest blush that nature spreads
 Gave colour to her cheek ;
 Such orient colour smiles thro' heav'n
 When May's sweet mornings break.

Nor let the pride of great ones scorn
 This charmer of the plains ;
 That sun which bids their diamond blaze,
 To deck our lily deigns.

Long had she fir'd each youth with love,
 Each maiden with despair ;
 And tho' by all a wonder own'd,
 Yet knew not she was fair.

Till E D W I N came, the pride of swains,
 A soul that knew no art,
 And from whose eyes serenely mild,
 Shone forth the feeling heart.

A mutual flame was quickly caught,
 Was quickly too reveal'd ;
 For neither bosom lodg'd a wish,
 Which virtue keeps conceal'd.

What happy hours of heartfelt bliss,
 Did love on both bestow !
 But bliss too mighty long to last,
 Where fortune proves a foe.

His sister, wh'ō like envy form'd,
 Like her in mischief joy'd,
 To work them harm, with wicked skill
 Each darker art employ'd.

The father too, a fordid man,
 Who love nor pity knew,
 Was all unfeeling as the rock
 From whence his riches grew.

Long had he seen their mutual flame,
 And seen it long unmov'd ;
 Then with a father's frown at last,
 He sternly disapprov'd.

In EDWIN's gentle heart a war
 Of differing passions strove ;
 His heart which durst not disobey,
 Yet could not cease to love.

Deny'd her sight, he oft behind
 The spreading hawthorn crept,
 To snatch a glance, to mark the spot
 Where EMMA walk'd and wept.

Oft too in Stanemore's wintry waste,
 Beneath the moonlight shade,
 In sighs to pour his soften'd soul
 The midnight mourner stray'd.

His cheeks, where love with beauty glow'd,
 A deadly pale oercast ;
 So fades the fresh rose in his prime,
 Before the northern blast.

The parents now, with late remorse,
 Hung o'er his dying bed;
 And weary'd heav'n with fruitless pray'rs,
 And fruitless sorrows shed.

'Tis past, he cry'd, but if your souls
 Sweet mercy yet can move,
 Let these dim eyes once more behold
 What they must ever love.

She came ; his cold hand softly touch'd,
 And bath'd with many a tear ;
 Fast falling o'er the primrose pale
 So mourning dew's appear.

But oh ! his sister's jealous care
 (A cruel sister she !)
 Forbad what EMMA came to say,
 My EDWIN, live for me.

Now homeward as she hopeless went,
 The church-yard path along,
 The blast blew cold, the dark owl scream'd
 Her lover's fun'ral song.

Amid the gloom of night,
 Her starting fancy found
 In ev'ry bush his hovering shade,
 His groan in every sound

Alone, appall'd, thus had she pass'd
 The visionary vale,
 When lo ! the death-bell smote her ear,
 Sad sounding in the gale.

Just then she reach'd, with trembling steps,
 Her aged mother's door ;
 He's gone, she cry'd, and I shall see
 That angel face no more.

I feel, I feel this breaking heart
 Beat high against my side :
 From her white arm down sunk her head,
 She shiver'd, sigh'd, and died.

CELADON AND AMELIA.

TIS listening fear, and dumb amazement all :
 When to the startled eye the sudden glance
 Appears far south, eruptive thro' the cloud ;
 And following slower in explosion vast,
 The Thunder raises his tremendous voice.
 At first, heard solemn o'er the verge of heaven,
 The tempest growls; but as it nearer comes,
 And rolls its awful burden on the wind
 The lightnings flash a larger curve, and more
 The noise astounds : till over head a sheet
 Of livid flame discloses wide ; then shuts,
 And opens wider ; shuts and opens still Expansive, wrapping either in a blaze.
 Follows the loosen'd aggravated roar,
 Enlarging, deepening, mingling ; peal on peal
 Crush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth.

Guilt hears appall'd, with deeply troubled thought.
 And yet not always on the guilty head
 Descends the fated flash. Young CELADON
 And his AMELIA were a matchless pair;
 With equal Virtue form'd and equal grace,
 The same, distinguish'd by their sex alone :
 Hers the mild lustre of the blooming morn,
 And his the radiance of the risen day.

They lov'd : but such their guiltless passion was,
 As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
 Of innocence, and undissembling truth.

'Twas friendship heighten'd by the mutual wish,
 Th' enchanting hope, and sympathetic glow,
 Beam'd from the mutual eye. Devoting all
 To love, each was to each a dearer self ;

Supremely

Supremely happy in th' awaken'd power
Of giving joy. Alone, amid the shades,
Still in harmonious intercourse they liv'd
The rural day, and talk'd the flowing heart,
Or sigh'd, and look'd unutterable things.

So pass'd their life, a clear united stream,
By care unruffled : till, in evil hour,
The tempest caught them on the tender walk,
Heedless how far, and where its mazes stray'd,
While, with each other blest, creative love
Still bade eternal Eden smile around.
Heavy with instant fate her bosom heav'd
Unwonted sighs, and stealing oft a look
Tow'rd the big gloom, on CELADON her eye
Fell tearful, wetting her disordered cheek.
In vain assuring love, and confidence
In HEAVEN, repress'd her fear ; it grew, and shook
Her frame near dissolution. He perceiv'd
Th' unequal conflict, and as angels look
On dying saints, his eyes compassion shed,
With love illumin'd high. " Fear not, he said,
" Sweet innocence ! thou stranger to offence ;
" And inward storm ! HE, who yon skies involves
" In frowns of darkness, ever smiles on thee
" With kind regard. O'er thee the secret shaft
" That wastes at midnight, or th' undreaded hour
" Of noon, flies harmless : and that very voice,
" Which thunders terror thro' the guilty heart,
" With tongues of seraphs whispers peace to thine.
" 'Tis safety to be near thee, sure and thus " To clasp perfection !) From his void embrace,
(Mysterious Heaven ?) that moment, to the ground,
A blacken'd corse, was struck the beauteous maid.
But who can paint the lover as he stood,
Pierc'd by severe amazement, hating life,
Speechless, and fix'd in all the depth of woe !
So, faint resemblance ! on the marble tomb,
'The well-dissembled mourner stooping stands,
For ever silent, and for ever sad.

J U N I O A N D T H E A N A.

SOON as young reason dawn'd in Junio's breast,
 His father sent him from these genial isles,
 To where old Thames with conscious pride surveys
 Green Eton, soft abode of every Muse.
 Each classic beauty soon he made his own ;
 And soon fam'd Isis saw him woo the Nine,
 On her inspiring banks ; Love tun'd his song ;
 For fair Theana was his only theme,
 Acasto's daughter, whom, in early youth,
 He oft distinguish'd ; and for whom he oft
 Had clim'd the bending cocoa's airy height,
 To rob it of its nectar ; which the maid,
 When he presented, more nectareous deem'd.—
 The sweetest sappadillas oft he brought ;
 From him more sweet ripe sappadillas seem'd.—
 Nor had long absence yet effac'd her form ;
 Her charms still triumph'd o'er Britannia's fair.
 One morn he met her in Sheen's royal walks :
 Nor knew, till then, sweet Sheen contain'd his all.
 His taste mature approv'd his infant choice.
 In colour, form, expression, and in grace,
 She shone all perfect ; while each pleasing art,
 And each soft virtue that the sex adorns,
 Adorn'd the woman. My imperfect strain
 Can ill describe the transports Junio felt
 At this discovery. He declar'd his love ;
 She own'd his merit, nor refus'd his hand.

And shall not Hymen light his brightest torch,
 For this delighted pair ? Ah, Junio knew,
 His sire detested his Theana's house !—
 Thus duty, reverence, gratitude, conspir'd
 To check their happy union. He resolv'd
 (And many a sigh that resolution cost)
 To pass the time, till death his sire remov'd, in visiting old Europe's letter'd climes :

While

While she (and many a tear that parting drew)
Embark'd, reluctant, for her native isle.

Tho' learned, curious, and tho' nobly bent
With each rare talent to adorn his mind,
His native land to serve; no joys he found.—
Yet sprightly Gaul, yet Belgium, Saturn's reign;
Yet Greece, of old the seat of every Muse,
Of freedom, courage; yet Ausonia's clime,
His steps explor'd: where painting, music's strains,
Where arts, where laws, (philosophy's best child)
With rival beauties, his attention claim'd.
To his just-judging, his instructed eye,
The all-perfect Medicean Venus seem'd
A perfect semblance of his Indian fair:
But, when she spoke of love, her voice surpass'd
The harmonious warblings of Italian song.

Twice one long year elaps'd, when letters came,
Which briefly told him of his father's death.
Afflicted, filial, yet to Heaven resign'd,
Soon he reach'd Albion, and as soon embark'd,
Eager to clasp the object of his love.

Blow, prosperous breezes; swiftly sail, thou Po:
Swift sail'd the Po, and happy breezes blew.

In Biscay's stormy seas an armed ship,
Of force superior, from loud Charente's wave
Clapt them on board. The frighted flying crew
Their colours strike; when dauntless Junio, fir'd
With noble indignation, kill'd the chief,
Who on the bloody deck dealt slaughter round.
The Gauls retreat: the Britons loud huzza;
And touch'd with shame, with emulation stung,
So plied their cannon, plied their missile fires,
That soon in air the hapless Thunderer blew.

Blow, prosperous breezes; swiftly sail, thou Po:
May no more dangerous fights retard thy way!

Soon Porto Santo's rocky heights they spy,
Like clouds dim rising in the distant sky.
Glad Eurus whistles; laugh the sportive crew;
Each sail is set to catch the favouring gale,
While on the yard-arm the harpooner sits.
Strikes the boneta, or the shark insnares.

The little nautilus with purple pride
 Expands his sails, and dances o'er the waves :
 Small winged fishes on the shrouds alight ;
 And beauteous dolphins gently play'd around.

Tho' faster than the tropic-bird they flew,
 Oft Junio cried, ah ! when shall we see land ?
 Soon land they made : and now in thought he clasp'd
 His Indian bride, and deem'd his toils o'er paid.

She, no less anxious, every evening walk'd
 On the cool margin of the purple main,
 Intent her Junio's vessel to descry.

On eve, (faint calms for many a day had rag'd)
 The winged Dæmons of the tempest rose ;
 Thunder, and rain, the lightning's awful power.
 She fled : could innocence, could beauty claim
 Exemption from the grave ; the ethereal bolt,
 That stretch'd her speechless, o'er her lovely head
 Had innocently roll'd.

Mean while, impatient Junio leap'd ashore,
 Regardless of the Dæmons of the storm.
 Ah ! youth ! what woes, too great for man to bear,
 Are ready to burst on thee ? Urge not so
 Thy flying courser. Soon Theana's porch
 Receiv'd him : at his sight, the ancient slaves
 Affrighted shriek, and to the chamber point :—
 Confounded, yet unknowing what they meant,
 He entered hasty—

Ah ! what a sight for one who lov'd so well !
 All pale and cold, in every feature death,
 Theana lay ; and yet a glimpse of joy
 Played on her face, while with faint, faltering voice,
 She thus address'd the youth, whom yet she knew,

“ Welcome, my Junio, to thy native shore !
 “ Thy sight repays this summons of my fate :
 “ Live, and live happy ; sometimes think of me :
 “ By night, by day, you still engag'd my care ;
 “ And next to God, you now my thoughts employ :
 “ Accept of this—My little all I give ;
 “ Would it were larger”——Nature could no more :
 She look'd, embrac'd him, with a groan expir'd.

But

But say, what strains, what language can express
 The thousand pangs, which tore the lover's breast?
 Upon the breathless corse himself he threw,
 And to her clay-cold lips, with trembling haste,
 Ten thousand kisses gave. He strove to speak;
 Nor words he found: he clasp'd her in his arms;
 He sigh'd, he swoon'd, look'd up and died away.

One grave contains this hapless, faithful pair;
 And still the Cane-isles tell their matchless love!

C H A P. XVIII.

DOUGLAS TO LORD RANDOLPH.

MY name is NORVAL: on the Grampian hills
 My father feeds his flock; a frugal swain,
 Whole constant cares were to encrease his store,
 And keep his only son, myself at home.
 For I had heard of battles, and I long'd
 To follow to the field some warlike lord;
 And heaven soon granted what my sire denied.
 This moon which rose last night, round as my shield,
 Had not yet fill'd her horns, when, by her light,
 A band of fierce barbarians, from the hills,
 Rush'd like a torrent down upon the vale,
 Sweeping our flocks and herds. The shepherds fled,
 For safety, and for succour. I alone,
 With bended bow, and quiver full of arrows,
 Hover'd about the enemy, and mark'd
 The road he took, then hasted to my friends:
 Whom, with a troop of fifty chosen men,
 I met advancing. The pursuit I led,
 Till we o'ertook the spoil-encumbered foe.
 We fought and conquer'd. Ere a sword was drawn,
 An arrow from my bow had pierc'd their chief,
 Who wore that day the arms which now I wear.
 Returning home in triumph, I disdain'd
 The shepherd's slothful life; and having heard
 That our good king had summon'd his bold peers,

To lead their warriors to the Carron side,
 I left my father's house, and took with me
 A chosen servant to conduct my steps :——
 Yon trembling coward who forsook his master.
 Journeying with this intent, I past these towers,
 And, heaven-directed, came this day to do
 The happy deed that gilds my humble name.

OTHELLO's APOLOGY.

MOST potent, grave, and reverend Signiors,
 My very noble and approved good masters ;
 That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
 It is most true; true, I have married her;
 The very head and front of my offending
 Hath this extent ; no more. Rude am I in speech,
 And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace ;
 For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
 Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd
 Their dearest action in the tented field ;
 And little of this great world can I speak,
 More than pertains to feats of broils and battle ;
 And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
 In speaking for myself. Yet, by your patience,
 I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver,
 Of my whole course of love ; what drugs, what charms,

What conjuration, and what mighty magic,
 (For such proceeding I am charg'd withal)
 I won his daughter with.———

Her father lov'd me, oft invited me ;
 Still questioned me the story of my life,
 From year to year ; the battles, sieges, fortunes,
 That I have past.

I ran it through, ev'n from my boyish days,
 To th' very moment that he bade me tell it.
 Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,

Of

Of moving accidents by flood and field :
 Of hair-breadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach :

Of being taken by the insolent foe,
 And sold to slavery ; of my redemption thence,
 And with it all my travel's history :
 Wherein of antres vast, and desarts idle,
 Rough quarries, rocks, and hills, whose heads touch
 heav'n,

It was my bent to speak.—All these to hear
 Would Desdemona seriously incline.
 But still the house-affairs would draw her thence,
 Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,
 She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
 Devour up my discourse : which I observing,
 Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
 To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
 That I would all my pilgrimage dilate ;
 Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
 But not distinctively. I did consent,
 And often did beguile her of her tears,
 When I did speak of some distressful stroke
 That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
 She gave me for my pains a world of sighs.
 She swore, in faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange,

'Twas pitiful, 'twas wond'rous pitiful——
 She wish'd she had not heard it ;——yet she wish'd
 That Heav'n had made her such a man :—she thank'd me,

And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
 I should but teach him how to tell my story,
 And that would woo her. On this hint I spake ;
 She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd ;
 And I lov'd her, that she did pity them.
 This only is the witchcraft I have us'd.

O N M O D E S T Y.

I KNOW no two words that have been more abused by the different and wrong interpretations which are put upon them, than these two, Modesty and Assurance. To say, such a one is a modest man, sometimes indeed passes for a good character; but at present is very often used to signify a sheepish awkward fellow, who has neither good breeding, politeness, nor any knowledge of the world.

AGAIN, A man of assurance, though at first it only denoted a person of a free and open carriage, is now very usually applied to a profligate wretch, who can break through all the rules of decency and morality without a blush.

I SHALL endeavour therefore in this essay to restore these words to their true meaning, to prevent the idea of Modesty from being confounded with that of Sheepishness, and to hinder impudence from passing for Assurance.

IF I was put to define Modesty, I would call it, The reflection of an ingenuous mind, either when a man has committed an action for which he censures himself, or fancies that he is exposed to the censure of others.

FOR this reason a man truly modest is as much so when he is alone as in company, and as subject to a blush

a blush in his closet, as when the eyes of multitudes are upon him.

I DO not remember to have met with any instance of modesty with which I am so well pleased, as that celebrated one of the young Prince, whose father, being a tributary king to the Romans, had several complaints laid against him before the senate, as a tyrant and oppressor of his subjects. The Prince went to Rome to defend his father, but coming into the senate, and hearing a multitude of crimes proved upon him, was so oppressed when it came to his turn to speak, that he was unable to utter a word. The story tells us, that the fathers were more moved at this instance of modesty and ingenuity, than they could have been by the most pathetic oration; and, in short, pardoned the guilty father for this early promise of virtue in the son.

I TAKE Assurance to be, The faculty of possessing a man's self, or of saying and doing indifferent things without any uneasiness or emotion in the mind. That which generally gives a man assurance, is a moderate knowledge of the world, but above all, a mind fixed and determined in itself to do nothing against the rules of honour and decency. An open and assured behaviour is the natural consequence of such a resolution. A man thus armed, if his words or actions are at any time misinterpreted, retires within himself, and from a consciousness of his own integrity, assumes force enough to despise the little censures of ignorance or malice.

EVERY one ought to cherish and encourage in himself the modesty and assurance I have here mentioned.

A MAN without assurance is liable to be made uneasy by the folly or ill-nature of every one he converses with. A man without modesty is lost to all sense of honour and virtue.

It is more than probable, that the Prince above-mentioned possessed both these qualifications in a very eminent degree. Without assurance he would never have undertaken to speak before the most august assembly in the world; without modesty he would have pleaded the cause he had taken upon him, though it had appeared ever so scandalous.

FROM what has been said, it is plain, that modesty and assurance are both amiable, and may very well meet in the same person. When they are thus mixed and blended together, they compose what we endeavour to express when we say, a modest assurance; by which we understand the just mean between bashfulness and impudence.

I SHALL conclude with observing that as the same man may be both modest and assured, so it is also possible for the same person to be both impudent and bashful.

WE have frequent instances of this odd kind of mixture in people of depraved minds and mean education; who, though they are not able to meet a man's eyes, or pronounce a sentence without confusion, can voluntarily commit the greatest villanies, or most indecent actions.

SUCH a person seems to have made a resolution to do ill even in spite of himself, and in defiance of all those checks and restraints his temper and complexion seem to have laid in his way.

UPON the whole, I would endeavour to establish this maxim, That the practice of virtue is the most proper method to give a man a becoming assurance in his words and actions. Guilt always seeks to shelter itself in one of the extremes, and is sometimes attended with both.

SPECTATOR.

C H A P. II.

ON CHEARFULNESS.

I HAVE always preferred Chearfulness to Mirth. The latter I consider as an act, the former as a habit of the mind. Mirth is short and transient, chearfulness fixed and permanent. Those are often raised into the greatest transports of mirth, who are subject to the greatest depressions of melancholy: on the contrary, chearfulness, though it does not give the mind such an exquisite gladness, prevents us from falling into any depths of sorrow. Mirth is like a flash of lightning, that breaks through a gloom of clouds, and glitters for a moment; chearfulness keeps up a kind of day-light in the mind, and fills it with a steady and perpetual serenity.

MEN of austere principles look upon mirth as too wanton and dissolute for a state of probation, and as filled with a certain triumph and insolence of heart that is inconsistent with a life which is every moment obnoxious to the greatest dangers. Writers of this complexion have observed, that the sacred Person who was the greatest pattern of perfection was never seen to laugh.

CHEARFULNESS of mind is not liable to any of these exceptions; it is of a serious and composed nature; it does not throw the mind into a condition improper for the present state of humanity, and is very conspicuous in the characters of those who are looked upon as the greatest Philosophers among the Heathens, as well as among those who have been deservedly esteemed as saints and holy men among Christians.

If we consider chearfulness in three lights, with regard to ourselves, to those we converse with, and to the great Author of our being, it will not a little recommend itself on each of these accounts. The man who is possessed of this excellent frame of mind, is not only easy in his thoughts, but a perfect master of all the powers and faculties of his soul : his imagination is always clear, and his judgment undisturbed : his temper is even and unruffled, whether in action or in solitude. He comes with a relish to all those goods which nature has provided for him, tastes all the pleasures of the creation which are poured upon him, and does not feel the full weight of those accidental evils which may befall him.

IF we consider him in relation to the persons whom he converses with, it naturally produces love and good-will towards him. A chearful mind is not only disposed to be affable and obliging, but raises the same good-humour in those who come within its influence. A man finds himself pleased, he does not know why, with the chearfulness of his companion : it is like a sudden sunshine that awakens a secret delight in the mind, without her attending to it. The heart rejoices of its own accord, and naturally flows out into friendship and benevolence towards the person who has so kindly an effect upon it.

WHEN I consider this chearful state of mind in its third relation, I cannot but look upon it as a constant habitual gratitude to the Author of nature. An inward chearfulness is an implicit praise and thanksgiving to Providence under all its dispensations. It is a kind of acquiescence in the state wherein we are placed, and a secret approbation of the Divine will in his conduct towards men.

A MAN, who uses his best endeavours to live according to the dictates of virtue and right reason, has two perpetual sources of chearfulness, in the consideration of his own nature, and of that Being on whom he has a dependence. If he looks into himself, he cannot but rejoice in that existence, which is so lately bestowed upon him, and which, after millions of ages, will be still new, and still in its beginning. How many self-congratulations naturally rise in the mind, when it reflects on this its entrance into eternity, when it takes a view of those

all, with regard to those who have a right notion of it. Secondly, with regard to those who have a mistaken notion of it. And thirdly, with regard to those who treat it as chimerical, and turn it into ridicule.

IN the first place, true honour, though it be a different principle from religion, is that which produces the same effects. The lines of action, though drawn from different parts, terminate in the same point. Religion embraces virtue, and it is enjoined by the laws of God; honour, as it is graceful and ornamental to human nature. The religious man fears, the man of honour scorns to do an ill action. The latter considers vice as something that is beneath him, the other as something that is offensive to the Divine Being. The one as what is unbecoming, the other as what is forbidden. Thus Seneca speaks in the natural and genuine language of a man of honour, when he declares that were there no God to see or punish vice, he would not commit it, because it is of so mean, so base, and so vile a nature.

I SHALL conclude this head with the description of honour in the part of young Juba.

Honour's sacred tie, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue when it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not.
It ought not to be sported with.—

CATO.

IN the second place, we are to consider those who have mistaken notions of honour. And these are such as establish any thing to themselves for a point of honour which is contrary either to the laws of God, or of their country; who think it more honourable to revenge than to forgive an injury; who make no scruple of telling a lie, but would put any man to death that accuses them of it; who are more careful to guard their reputation by their courage than than by their virtues. True fortitude is indeed so becoming in human nature, that he who wants it scarce deserves the name of a man; but we find several who so much abuse this notion, that they place the whole idea of honour in a kind of brutal courage; by which means we have had many among us who have called themselves men of honour, that would have been a disgrace to a gibbet. In a word, the man who sacrifices any duty of a reasonable creature to a prevailing mode or fashion, who looks upon any thing as honourable that is displeasing to his Maker, or destructive to society, who thinks himself obliged by this principle to the practice of some virtues and not of others, is by no means to be reckoned among true men of honour.

TIMOGENES was a lively instance of one actuated by false honour. Timogenes would smile at a man's jest who ridiculed his Maker, and at the same time, run a man through the body that spoke ill of his friend. Timogenes would have scorned to have betrayed a secret, that was intrusted with him, though the fate of his country depended upon the discovery of it. Timogenes took away the life of a young fellow in a duel, for having spoken ill of Belinda, a lady whom he himself had seduced in her youth, and betrayed into want and ignominy. To close his character, Timogenes, after having ruined several poor tradesmen's families, who had trusted him, sold his estate to satisfy his creditors; but like a man of honour, disposed of all the money he could make of it, in the paying off his play debts, or to speak in his own language, his debts of honour.

IN the third place we are to consider those persons who treat this principle as chimerical, and turn it into ridicule. Men who are professedly of no honour, are of a more profligate and abandoned nature than even those who are actuated by false notions of it, as there is more hope of a heretic than of an atheist. These sons of infamy consider honour with old Syphax, in the play before-mentioned, as a fine imaginary ginary notion that leads astray young unexperienced men, and draws them into real mischiefs, while they are engaged in the pursuits of a shadow. These are generally persons who, in Shakespear's phrase, "are worn and hackneyed in the ways of men;" whose imaginations are grown callous, and have lost all those delicate sentiments which are natural to minds that are innocent and undepraved. Such old battered miscreants ridicule every thing as romantic that comes in competition with their present interest, and treat those persons as visionaries, who dare stand up in a corrupt age, for what has not its immediate reward joined to it. The talents, interest, or experience of such men, make them very often useful in all parties, and at all times. But whatever wealth and dignities they may arrive at, they ought to consider, that every one stands as a blot in the annals of his country, who arrives at the temple of honour by any other way than through that of virtue.

CHAP. V.

ON GOOD HUMOUR.

GOOD humour may be defined a habit of being pleased; a constant and perennial softness of manner, easiness of approach, and suavity of disposition; like that which every man perceives in himself, when the first transports of new felicity have subsided, and his thoughts are only kept in motion by a slow succession of soft impulses. Good humour is a state between gaiety and unconcern; the act or emanation of a mind at leisure to regard the gratification of another.

It is imagined by many, that whenever they aspire to please, they are required to be merry, and to shew the gladness of their souls by flights of pleasantry, and bursts of laughter. But though these men may be for a time heard with applause and admiration, miration, they seldom delight us long. We enjoy them a little and then retire to easiness and good humour, as the eye gazes a while on eminences glittering with the sun, but soon turns aching away to verdure and to flowers.

GAIIETY is to good humour as animal perfumes to vegetable fragrance ; the one overpowers weak spirits, and the other recreates and revives them. Gaiety seldom fails to give some pain ; the hearers either strain their faculties to accompany its toweringings, or are left behind in envy and despair. Good humour boasts no faculties which every one does not believe in his power, and pleases principally by not offending.

It is well known that the most certain way to give any man pleasure, is to persuade him that you receive pleasure from him, to encourage him to freedom and confidence, and to avoid any such appearance of superiority as may overbear and depress him. We see many that by this art only, spend their days in the midst of caresses, invitations, and civilities ; and without any extraordinary qualities or attainments, are the universal favourites of both sexes, and certainly find a friend in every place. The darlings of the world will, indeed, be generally found such as excite neither jealousy nor fear, and are not considered as candidates for any eminent degree of reputation, but content themselves with common accomplishments, and endeavour rather to solicit kindness than to raise esteem. Therefore in assemblies and places of resort it seldom fails to happen, that though at the entrance of some particular person every face brightens with gladness, and every hand is extended in salutation, yet if you pursue him beyond the first exchange of civilities, you will find him of very small importance ; whereas the good-natured man is welcome to the whole company, and looked upon as one by whom all conceive themselves admired, one with whom any one is at liberty to amuse himself when he can find no other auditor or companion, as one with whom all are at ease, who will hear a jest without criticism, and a narrative without contradiction, who laughs at every wit, and yields to every disputer.

THERE are many whose vanity always inclines them to associate with those from whom they have no reason to fear mortification ; and there are times in which the wise and the knowing are willing to receive praise without the labour of deserving it, in which the most elevated mind is willing to descend, and the most active to be at rest. All therefore are at some hour or another fond of companions whom they can entertain upon easy terms, and who will relieve them from solitude, without condemning them to vigilance and caution. We are most inclined to love when we have nothing to fear, and he that encourages us to please ourselves, will not be long without preference in our affection to those whose learning holds us at the same distance of pupils, or whose wit calls all attention from us, and leaves us without importance, and without regard.

IT is remarked by prince Henry, when he sees Falstaff lying on the ground. “ that he could have “ better spared a better man.” He was well acquainted with the vices and follies of him whom he lamented, but while his conviction compelled him to do justice to superior qualities, his tenderness still broke out at the remembrance of Falstaff, of the cheerful companion, the loud buffoon, with whom he had passed his time in all the luxury of idleness, who had gladdened him with unenvied merriment, and whom he could at once enjoy and despise.

You may perhaps think this account of those who are distinguished for their good humour, not very consistent with the praises which I have bestowed upon it. But surely nothing can more evidently shew the value of this quality, than that it recommends those who are destitute of all other excellencies, and procures regard to the trifling, friendship to the worthless, and affection to the dull.

Good

Good humour is indeed generally degraded by the characters in which it is found ; for being considered as a cheap and vulgar quality, we find it often neglected by those that having excellencies of higher reputation and greater splendor, perhaps imagine that they have some right to gratify themselves at the expence of others, and are to demand compliance, rather than to practise it. It is by some unfortunate mistake that almost all those who have any claim to esteem or love, press their pretensions with too little consideration of others. This mistake my own interest as well as my zeal for general happiness makes me desirous to rectify ; for I have a friend, who because he knows his own fidelity, and usefulness, is never willing to sink into a companion. I have a wife whose beauty first subdued me, and whose wit confirmed her conquest ; but whose beauty now serves no other purpose than to entitle her to tyranny, and whose wit is only used to justify perverseness.

SURELY nothing can be more unreasonable than to lose the will to please, when we are conscious of the power, or shew more cruelty than to chuse any kind of influence before that of kindness. He that regards the welfare of others, should make his virtue approachable, that it may be loved and copied ; and he that considers the wants which every man feels, or will feel of external assistance, must rather wish to be surrounded by those that love him, than by those that admire his excellencies, or solicit his favours ; for admiration ceases with novelty, and interest gains its end and retires. A man whose great qualities want the ornament of superficial attractions, is like a naked mountain with mines of gold, which will be frequented only till the treasure is exhausted.

ON THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE WORLD.

NOTHING has so much exposed men of learning to contempt and ridicule, as their ignorance of things which are known to all but themselves. Those who have been taught to consider the institutions of the schools, as giving the last perfection to human abilities, are surprized to see men wrinkled with study, yet wanting to be instructed in the minute circumstances of propriety, or the necessary forms of daily transaction; and quickly shake off their reverence for modes of education, which they find to produce no ability above the rest of mankind.

Books, says Bacon, can never teach the use of books. The student must learn by commerce with mankind to reduce his speculations to practice, and accommodate his knowledge to the purposes of life.

It is too common for those who have been bred to scholastic professions, and passed much of their time in academies where nothing but learning confers honours, to disregard every other qualification, and to imagine that they shall find mankind ready to pay homage to their knowledge, and to crowd about them for instruction. They therefore step out from their cells into the open world, with all the confidence of authority and dignity of importance; they look round about them at once with ignorance and scorn on a race of beings to whom they are equally unknown and equally contemptible, but whose manners they must imitate, and with whose opinions they must comply, if they desire to pass their time happily among them.

To lessen that disdain with which scholars are inclined to look on the common business of the world, and the unwillingness with which they condescend to learn what is not to be found in any system of philosophy, it may be necessary to consider that though admiration is excited by abstruse researches and remote discoveries, yet pleasure is not given, nor affection conciliated, but by softer accomplishments, and qualities more easily communicable to those about us. He that can only converse upon questions, about which only a small part of mankind has knowledge sufficient to make them curious, must lose his days in unsocial silence, and live in the crowd of life without a companion. He that can only be useful on great occasions, may die without exerting his abilities, and stand a helpless spectator of a thousand vexations which fret away happiness, and which nothing is required to remove but a little dexterity of conduct and readiness of expedients.

No degrees of knowledge attainable by man is able to set him above the want of hourly assistance, or to extinguish the desire of fond endearments, and tender officiousness; and therefore, no one should think it unnecessary to learn those arts by which friendship may be gained. Kindness is preserved by a constant reciprocation of benefits or interchange of pleasures; but such benefits only can be bestowed, as others are capable of receiving, and such pleasures only imparted, as others are qualified to enjoy.

By this descent from the pinnacles of art no honour will be lost; for the condescensions of learning are always overpaid by gratitude. An elevated genius employed in little things, appears, to use the simile of Longinus, like the sun in his evening declination, he remits his splendor but retains his magnitude, and pleases more though he dazzles less.

ON THE ADVANTAGES OF UNITING GENTLENESS OF MANNERS WITH FIRMNESS OF MIND.

I Mentioned to you, some time ago, a sentence, which I would most earnestly wish you always to retain in your thoughts, and observe in your conduct. It is suaviter in modo, fortiter in re. I do not know any one rule so unexceptionably useful and necessary in every part of life.

The suaviter in modo alone would degenerate and sink into a mean, timid complaisance, and passiveness, if not supported and dignified by the fortiter in re; which would also run into impetuosity and brutality, if not tempered and softened by the suaviter in modo: however, they are seldom united. The warm, choleric man, with strong animal spirits, despises the suaviter in modo, and thinks to carry all before him by the fortiter in re. He may possibly by great accident, now and then succeed, when he has only weak and timid people to deal with; but his general fate will be, to shock, offend, be hated and fail. On the other hand, the cunning crafty man, thinks to gain all his ends by the suaviter in modo only: he becomes all things to all men; he seems to have no opinion of his own, and servilely adopts the present opinion of the present person; he insinuates himself only into the esteem of fools, but is soon detected, and surely despised by every body else. The wise man (who differs as much from the cunning, as from the choleric man) alone joins the suaviter in modo with the fortiter in re.

If you are in authority, and have a right to command, your commands, delivered suaviter in modo will be willingly, cheerfully, and consequently well obeyed; whereas, if given only fortiter, that is brutally, they will rather, as Tacitus says, be interpreted ed than executed. For my own part, if I bid my footman bring me a glass of wine, in a rough, insulting manner, I should expect, that in obeying me, he would contrive to spill some of it upon me ; and I am sure I should deserve it. A cool steady resolution would shew, that where you have a right to command, you will be obeyed ; but, at the same time, a gentleness in the manner of enforcing that obedience, should make it a chearful one, and soften, as much as possible, the mortifying consciousness of inferiority. If you are to ask a favour, or even to solicit your due, you must do it suaviter in modo, or you will give those, who have a mind to refuse you either, a pretence to do it, by resenting the manner ; but, on the other hand, you must, by a steady perseverance and decent tenaciousness, show the fortiter in re. In short, This precept is the only way I know in the world, of being loved without being despised, and feared without being hated. It constitutes the dignity of character, which every wise man must endeavour to establish.

If therefore you find that you have a hastiness in your temper, which unguardedly breaks out into indiscreet sallies, or rough expressions, to either your superiors, your equals, or your inferiors, watch it narrowly, check it carefully, and call the suaviter in modo to your assistance : at the first impulse of passion be silent, till you can be soft. Labour even to get the command of your countenance so well, that those emotions may not be read in it : a most unspeakable advantage in business ! On the other hand, let no complaisance, no gentleness of temper, no weak desire of pleasing on your part, no wheedling, coaxing, nor flattery, on other people's, make you recede one jot from any point that reason and prudence have bid you pursue ; but return to the charge, persist, persevere, and you will find most things attainable that are possible. A yielding, timid meekness is always abused and insulted by the unjust and the unfeeling ; but meekness when sustained by the fortiter

in re, is always respected, commonly successful. In your friendships and connections, as well as in your enmities, this rule is particularly useful; let your firmness and vigour preserve and invite attachments to you; but, at the same time, let your manner hinder the enemies of your friends and dependants from becoming yours: let your enemies be disarmed by the gentleness of your manner, but let them feel at the same time, the steadiness of your just resentment; for there is great difference between bearing malice, which is always ungenerous, and a resolute self defence, which is always prudent and justifiable.

I CONCLUDE with this observation, That gentleness of manners, with firmness of mind, is a short, but full description of human perfection, on this side of religious and moral duties.

LORD CHESTERFIELD.

CHAP. VIII.

ON GOOD SENSE.

WERE I to explain what I understand by good sense, I should call it right reason; but right reason that arises, not from formal and logical deductions, but from a sort of intuitive faculty in the soul, which distinguishes by immediate perception: a kind of innate sagacity, that in many of its properties seems very much to resemble instinct. It would be improper, therefore, to say, that Sir Isaac Newton shewed his good sense, by those amazing discoveries which he made in natural philosophy: the operations of this gift of heaven are rather instantaneous, than the result of any tedious process. Like Diomed, after Minerva had endued him with the power of discerning gods from mortals, the man discovers at once the truth of those objects he is most concerned to distinguish; and conducts himself with suitable caution and security.

It is for this reason, possibly, that this quality of the mind is not so often found united with learning as one could wish : for good sense being accustomed to receive her discoveries without labour or study, she cannot so easily wait for those truths, which being traced at a distance, and lying concealed under numberless covers, require much pains and application to unfold.

BUT though good sense is not in the number, nor always, it must be owned, in the company of the sciences ; yet is it (as the most sensible of poets has justly observed) fairly worth the seven.

Rectitude of understanding is indeed the most useful, as well as the most noble of human endowments, as it is the sovereign guide and director in every branch of civil and social intercourse.

UPON whatever occasion this enlightening faculty is exerted, it is always sure to act with distinguished eminence ; but its chief and peculiar province seems to lie in the commerce of the world. Accordingly we may observe, that those who have conversed more with men than with books ; whose wisdom is derived rather from experience than contemplation ; generally possess this happy talent with superior perfection. For good sense, though it cannot be acquired, may be improved ; and the world, I believe, will ever be found to afford the most kindly soil for its cultivation.

C H A P. IX.

O N S T U D Y.

STUDIES serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness and retiring ; for ornament, is in discourse ; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars one by one ; but the general counsels, and the plots, and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in studies is sloth ; to use them too much for for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humour of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study, and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men condemn studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them: for they teach not their own use, but that is a wisdom without them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute, not to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others; but that should be only in the less important arguments, and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning to seem to know that he doth not.

BACON.

C H A P. X.

O N S A T I R I C A L W I T.

—TRUST me, this unwary pleasantry of thine will sooner or later bring thee into scrapes and difficulties, which no after wit can extricate thee out of. In these sallies, too oft, I see, it happens, that the person laughed at, considers himself in the light of a person injured, with all the rights of such a situation belonging to him; and when thou viewest him in that light too, and reckon'st upon his friends, his family, his kindred and allies, and mustereſt up with them the many recruits which will liſt under him from a ſenſe of common danger ; 'tis no extravagant arithmetic to ſay, that for every ten jokes, thou haſt got an hundred enemies ; and till thou haſt gone on, and raiſed a ſwarm of waſps about thine ears, and art half ſtung to death by them, thou wilt never be convinced it is ſo.

I CANNOT ſuſpect it in the man whom I eſteem, that there is the leaſt ſpur from ſpleen or malevolence of intent in theſe ſallies. I believe and know them to be truly honeſt and ſportive : but conſider that fools cannot diſtinguiſh this, and that knaves will not ; and thou knoweſt not what it is, either to provoke the one, or to make merry the other : whenever they aſſociate for mutual defence, depend upon it, they will carry on the war in ſuch a manner againſt thee, my dear friend, as to make thee heartily ſick of it, and of thy life too.

REVENGE from ſome baneful corner ſhall level a tale of diſhonour at thee, which no innocence of heart or integrity of conduct ſhall ſet right. The fortunes of thy houſe ſhall totter,—thy character, which led the way to them, ſhall bleed on every ſide of it—thy faith be queſtioned—thy works belied—thy wit forgotten—thy learning trampled on. To wind up the laſt ſcene of thy tragedy, CRUELTY and COWARDICE, twin ruffians, hired and ſet on by MALICE in the dark, ſhall ſtrike together at all thy infirmities and miſtakes : the beſt of us, my friend, lie open there, and truſt me—when to gratify a private appetite, it is once reſolved upon, that an innocent and an helpſeſ creature ſhall be ſacrificed, it is an eaſy matter to pick up ſticks enough from any thicket where it has ſtrayed, to make a fire to offer it up with.

CHAP. XI.

HAMLET'S INSTRUCTIONS
TO THE PLAYERS.

SPEAK the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue. But if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town-crier had spoke my lines. And do not saw the air too much with your hand thus ; but use all gently ; for in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Oh ! it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustuous periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings ; who (for the most part) are capable of nothing, but inexplicable dumb shews and noise : I would have such a fellow whipp'd for o'erdoing termagant ; it out-herods Herod. Pray you, avoid it.

BE not too tame neither ; but let your own discretion be your tutor. Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature : for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing ; whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature ; to shew virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure. Now, this overdone, or come tardy of, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve : the censure of one of which must in allowance o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. Oh ! there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly (not to speak it profanely) that, neither having the accent of Christian, nor the gait of Christian, Pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well ; they imitated humanity so abominably.

AND let those that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them : for there be of them that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too ; though, in the mean time, some necessary question of the play be then to be considered—that's villainous, and shews a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it.

SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XII.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF MAN VINDICATED.

HE A V ' N from all creatures hides the book of Fate,

All but the Page prescrib'd their present state :
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know :
Or who could suffer Being here below ?
The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy Reason, would he skip and play ?
Pleas'd to the last he crops the flow'ry food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Oh blindness to the future ! kindly given,
That each may fill the circle mark'd by Heav'n,
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,
Atoms and systems into ruin hurl'd,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world.

Hope humbly then ; with trembling pinions soar ;
Wait the great teacher death ; and God adore.
What future bliss, he gives not thee to know,
But gives that Hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast ;
Man never is, but always to be blest :
The soul uneasy, and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo,

Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutor'd mind
 Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind;
 His soul proud Science never taught to stray
 Far as the solar walk, or milky way;
 Yet simple Nature to his hope has given,
 Behind the cloud-topt hill, an humbler heav'n;
 Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
 Some happier island in the wat'ry waste,
 Where slaves once more their native land behold,
 No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.
 'To Be, contents his natural desire,
 He asks no Angel's wing, no Seraph's fire;
 But thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
 His faithful dog shall bear him company.

Go, wiser thou! and in thy scale of sense,
 Weigh thy Opinion against Providence;
 Call imperfection what thou fanciest such,
 Say, here he gives too little, there too much:
 Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
 Yet cry, If Man's unhappy, God's unjust;
 If Man alone ingross not Heav'n's high care,
 Alone made perfect here, immortal there:
 Snatch from his hand the balance and the rod,
 Re-judge his justice, be the God of God.

In Pride, in reas'ning Pride, our error lies;
 All quit their sphere, and rush into the skies.
 Pride still is aiming at the blest abodes,
 Men would be Angels, Angels would be Gods.
 Aspiring to be Gods, if Angels fell,
 Aspiring to be Angels, Men rebel:
 And who but wishes to invert the laws
 Of ORDER, sins against th' Eternal Cause.

POPE.

C A P. XIII.

ON THE ORDER OF NATURE.

SEE, thro' this air, this ocean, and this earth,
 All matter quick, and bursting into birth.
 Above, how high progressive life may go !
 Around, how wide ! how deep extend below !
 Vast chain of Being ! which from God began,
 Nature's ethereal, human, angel, man ;
 Beast, bird, fish, insect, what no eye can see,
 No glass can reach ; from Infinite to thee,
 From thee to Nothing.—On superior pow'rs
 Were we to press, inferior might on ours ;
 Or in the full creation leave a void,
 Where, one step broken, the great scale's destroy'd.
 From Nature's chain whatever link you strike,
 Tenth or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike.

And, if each system in gradation roll,
 Alike essential to th' amazing Whole,
 The least confusion but in one, not all
 That system only, but the whole must fall.
 Let earth, unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
 Planets and suns rush lawless thro' the sky ;
 Let ruling Angels from their spheres be hurl'd,
 Being on Being wreck'd, and world on world ;
 Heav'n's whole foundations to their centre nod,
 And Nature tremble to the throne of God.
 All this dread ORDER break----for whom ? for thee ?
 Vile worm ?----oh Madness ! Pride ! Impiety !

What if the foot, ordain'd the dust to tread,
 Or hand, to toil, aspir'd to be the head ?
 What if the head, the eye, or ear repin'd
 To serve mere engines to the Ruling Mind ?
 Just as absurd for any part to claim
 'Tobe another, in this gen'ral frame :
 Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains,
 The great directing MIND of ALL ordains.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole;
 Whose body Nature is, and God the soul :
 That, chang'd thro' all, and yet in all the same,
 Great in the earth, as in th' eth'ral frame,
 Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
 Glows in the stars, and blossoms in the trees,
 Lives thro' all life, extends thro' all extent,
 Spreads undivided, operates unspent;
 Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part,
 As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart;
 As full, as perfect, in vile Man that mourns,
 As the rapt Seraph that adores and burns :
 To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
 He fills, he bounds, connects and equals all.

Cease then, nor ORDER Imperfection name :
 Our proper bliss depends on what we blame.
 Know thy own point : This kind, this due degree
 Of blindness, weakness, Heav'n bestows on thee.
 Submit.—In this, or any other sphere,
 Secure to be as blest as thou canst bear :
 Safe in the hand of one disposing Pow'r,
 Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
 All Nature is but Art, unknown to thee ;
 All Chance, Direction, which thou canst not see;
 All Discord, Harmony not understood ;
 All partial Evil, universal Good :
 And, spite of Pride, in erring Reason's spite,
 One truth is clear, WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT.

POPE.

C H A P. XIV.

THE ORIGIN OF SUPERSTITION AND TYRANNY.

WHO first taught souls enslav'd and realms undone ?

Th' enormous faith of many made for one ;
 That proud exception to all Nature's laws,
 T' invert the world, and counter-work its Cause ?

Force first made Conquest, and that conquest, Law
 'Till Superstition taught the tyrant awe,
 Then shar'd the Tyranny, then lent it aid,
 And Gods of Conjurors, Slaves of subjects made :
 She 'midst the lightning's blaze, and thunder's sound,

When rock'd the mountains, and when groan'd the ground,

She taught the weak to bend, the proud to pray
 To Pow'r unseen, and mightier far than they :
 She, from the rending earth and bursting skies,
 Saw Gods descend, and fiends infernal rise :
 Here fix'd the dreadful, there the blest abodes ;
 Fear made her Devils, and weak hope her Gods ;
 Gods partial, changeful, passionate, unjust,
 Whose attributes were Rage, Revenge, or Lust ;
 Such as the souls of cowards might conceive,
 And form'd like tyrants, tyrants would believe.
 Zeal then, not charity, became the guide ;
 And hell was built on spite, and heav'n on pride.
 Then sacred seem'd th' ethereal vault no more ;
 Altars grew marble then, and reek'd with gore :
 Then first the Flamen tasted living food ;
 Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood ;
 With Heav'n's own thunders shook the world below,
 And play'd the God an engine on his foe.

So drives Self love, thro' just and thro' unjust,
 To one man's pow'r ambition, lucre, lust :
 The same Self-love, in all, becomes the cause
 Of what restrains him, Government and Laws.
 For, what one likes, if others like as well,
 What serves one will, when many wills rebel ?
 How shall he keep, what, sleeping or awake,
 A weaker may surprize, a stronger take ?
 His safety must his liberty restrain :
 All join to guard what each desires to gain.
 Forc'd into virtue thus by self-defence,
 Ev'n Kings learn'd justice and benevolence :
 Self-love forsook the path it first pursu'd,
 And found the private in the public good.

'Twas then, the studious head or gen'rous mind,
 Follow'r of God, or friend of human kind,
 Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
 The Faith and Moral, Nature gave before;
 Re-lum'd her ancient light, not kindled new;
 If not God's image, yet his shadow drew:
 Taught Pow'r's due use to People and to Kings,
 Taught not to slack, nor strain its tender strings,
 The less, or greater, set so justly true,
 That touching one must strike the other too;
 'Till jarring int'rests, of themselves create
 Th' according music of a well-mix'd State.
 Such is the world's great harmony, that springs
 From Order, Union, full Consent of things:
 Where small and great, where weak and mighty, made

To serve, not suffer, strengthen, not invade:
 More pow'ful each as needful to the rest,
 And, in proportion as it blesses, blest;
 Draw to one point, and to one centre bring Beast, Man, or Angel, Servant, Lord, or King,

For Forms of Government let fools contest;
 Whate'er is best administer'd is best:
 For modes of Faith let graceful zealots fight;
 His can't be wrong whose life is in the right:
 In Faith and Hope the world will disagree,
 But all Mankind's concern is Charity:
 All must be false that thwart this one Great End;
 And all of God, that bless Mankind or mend.

Man, like the gen'rous vine, supported lives,
 The strength he gains is from th' embrace he gives;
 On their own Axis as the Planets run,
 Yet make at once their circle round the Sun;
 So two consistent motions act the Soul;
 And one regards itself, and one the Whole.

Thus God and Nature link'd the gen'ral frame,
 And bade Self-love and Social be the same,

Pope.

CYH A P. XV.ON ^{u-}
^h H A P P I N E S S.

O H H A P P I N E S S ! our being's end and aim !
Good, Pleasure, Ease, Content ! whate'er thy name :

That something still which prompts th' eternal sigh,

For which we bear to live, nor fear to die,
Which still so near us, yet beyond us lies,
O'erlook'd, seen double, by the fool, and wise.

Plant of celestial seed ! if dropt below,
Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow ?

Fair op'ning to some Court's propitious shine,
Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine ?

Twin'd with the wreaths Parnassian laurels yield,
Or reap'd in iron harvests of the field ?

Where grows ?—where grows it not ? If vain our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil :
Fix'd to no spot is Happiness sincere,

'Tis no where to be found, or ev'ry where ;

'Tis never to be bought, but always free,

And, fled from monarchs, St. JOHN ! dwells with thee.

Ask of the Learn'd the way ? The Learn'd are blind ;

This bids to serve, and that to shun mankind ;

Some place their bliss in action, some in ease,

Those call it Pleasure, and Contentment these ;

Some sunk to beasts, find pleasure end in pain ;

Some swell'd to Gods, confess ev'n Virtue vain ;

Or indolent, to each extreme they fall,

To trust in ev'ry thing, or doubt of all.

Who thus define it, say they more or less

Than this, that Happiness is Happiness ?

Take Nature's path, and mad opinions leave ;

All states can reach it, and all heads conceive ;

Obvious

Obvious her goods, in no extreme they dwell ;
 There needs but thinking right, and meaning well ;
 And mourn our various portions as we please,
 Equal is Common Sense, and Common Ease.

Remember, Man, " the Universal Cause
 " Acts not by partial, but by general laws ;"

And makes what happiness we justly call
 Substist not in the good of one, but all.

There's not a blessing Individuals find,
 But some way leans and hearkens to the kind :
 No Bandit fierce, no 'Tyrant mad with pride,
 No cavern'd Hermit, rests self satisfy'd :

Who most to thun or hate Mankind pretend,
 Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend :

Abstract what others feel, what others think,
 All pleasures sicken, and all glories sink :

Each has his share : and who would more obtain,
 Shall find, the pleasure pays not half the pain.

ORDER is Heav'n's first law ; and this confess,
 Some are, and must be, greater than the rest,
 More rich, more wise ; but who infers from hence
 That such are happier, shocks all common sense.

Heav'n to Mankind impartial we confess,
 If all are equal in their Happiness :

But mutual wants this Happiness increase ;

All Nature's difference keeps all Nature's peace.

Condition, circumstance is not the thing ;

Bliss is the same in subject or in king,

In who obtain defence, or who defend,

In him who is, or him who finds a friend :

Heav'n breathes thro' ev'ry member of the whole

One common blessing, as one common soul.

But Fortune's gifts if each alike possess,

And each were equal, must not all contest ?

If then to all men Happiness was meant,

God in Externals could not place Content.

Fortune her gifts may variously dispose,

And these be happy call'd, unhappy those ;

But Heav'n's just balance equal will appear,

While those are plac'd in Hope, and these in Fear ;

Not

Not present good or ill, the joy or curse,
But future views of better, or of worse.

Oh sons of earth! attempt ye still to rise,
By mountains plac'd on mountains, to the skies?
Heav'n still with laughter the vain toil surveys,
And buries mad men in the heaps they raise.

Know, all the good that individuals find,
Or God and Nature meant to mere Mankind,
Reason's whole pleasure, all the joys of Sense,
Lie in three words, Health, Peace, and Competence.

Pope.

C H A P. XVI.

O N V I R T U E.

K NOW then this truth (enough for man to know)

The only point where human bliss stands still,
And tastes the good without the fall to ill;
Where only Merit constant pay receives,
Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives;
The joy unequal'd, if its end it gain,
And if it lose, attended with no pain:
Without satiety, tho' e'er so blest'd,
And but more relish'd as the more distress'd:
The broadest mirth unfeeling Folly wears,
Less pleasing far than Virtue's very tears:
Good, from each object, from each place acquir'd,
For ever exercis'd, yet never tir'd;
Never elated, while one man's oppress'd;
Never dejected, while another's blest'd;
And where no wants, no wishes can remain,
Since but to wish more Virtue, is to gain.

See the sole bliss Heav'n could on all bestow!
Which who but feels can taste, but thinks can know:
Yet poor with fortune, and with learning blind,
The bad must miss; the good, untaught, will find;
Slave.

Slave to no sect, who takes no private road,
 But looks thro' Nature, up to Nature's God ;
 Pursues that Chain, which links the immense design,
 Joins heav'n and earth, and mortal and divine ;
 Sees, that no Being any bliss can know,
 But touches some above, and some below ;
 Learns from this union of the rising Whole,
 The first, last purpose of the human soul ;
 And knows where Faith, Law, Morals, all began,
 All end, in LOVE OF GOD, and LOVE OF MAN.

For him alone, Hope leads from goal to goal,
 And opens still, and opens on his soul ;
 'Till lengthen'd on to Faith, and unconfin'd,
 It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind.
 He sees, why Nature plants in Man alone
 Hope of known bliss, and Faith in bliss unknown :
 (Nature, whose dictates to no other kind
 Are giv'n in vain, but what they seek they find)
 Wise is her present ; she connects in this
 His greatest Virtue with his greatest Bliss ;
 At once his own bright prospect to be blest,
 And strongest motive to assist the rest.

Self-love thus push'd to social, to divine,
 Gives thee to make thy neighbour's blessing thine.
 Is this too little for thy boundless heart ?
 Extend it, let thy enemies have part :
 Grasp the whole world of Reason, Life, and Sense,
 In one close system of Benevolence :
 Happier as kinder, in whate'er degree,
 And height of Bliss but height of Charity.

God loves from Whole to Parts : But human soul

Must rise from Individuals to the Whole.
 Self-love but serves the virtuous mind to wake,
 As the small pebble stirs the peaceful lake ;
 The centre mov'd, a circle strait succeeds,
 Another still, and still another spreads ;
 Friend, parent, neighbour, first it will embrace ;
 His country next ; and next all human race ;

Wide

Wide and more wide, th' o'erflowings of the mind
 Take ev'ry creature in, of ev'ry kind ;
 Earth smiles all und, with boundless bounty blest,
 And Heav'n be^dolds its image in his breast.

O N V E R S I F I C A T I O N

MANY by Numbers judge a Poet's song ;
 And smooth or rough, with them, is right or wrong :

In the bright Muse tho' thousand charms conspire,
 Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire ;
 Who haunt Parnassus but to please their ear,
 Not mend their minds; as some to Church repair,
 Not for the Doctrine, but the music there. }
 These equal syllables alone require,
 Tho' oft the ear the open vowels tire ;
 While expletives their feeble aid do join ;
 And ten low words oft creep in one dull line :
 While they ring round the same unvary'd chimes,
 With sure returns of still expected rhymes ;
 Where-e'er you find " the cooling western breeze,"
 In the next line, it " whispers thro' the trees :"
 If crystal streams " with pleasing murmurs creep,"
 The reader's threaten'd (not in vain) with " sleep :"
 Then, at the last and only couplet fraught
 With some unmeaning thing they call a thought,
 A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
 That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length
 along.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow ;
 And praise the easy vigour of a line,
 Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
 As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.

'Tis

Much more had seen ; he studied from the life,
And in th' original perus'd mankind.

Vers'd in th' woes and vanities of life
He pitied man ; and much he pitied those Whom falsely smiling fate has curs'd with means
To dissipate their days in quest of joy.
Our aim is Happiness ; 'tis yours, 'tis mine,
He said, 'tis the pursuit of all that live ;
Yet few attain it, if 'twas e'er attain'd.
But they the widest wander from the mark,
Who thro' the flow'ry paths of saunt'ring Joy
Seek this coy Goddess ; that from stage to stage
Invites us still, but shifts as we pursue.
For not to name the pains that pleasure brings
To counterpoise itself, relentless Fate
Forbids that we thro' gay voluptuous wilds
Should ever roam : And were the Fates more kind,
Our narrow luxuries would soon be stale.
Were these exhaustless, Nature would grow sick,
And cloy'd with pleasure, squeamishly complain
That all was vanity, and life a dream.
Let nature rest ; Be busy for yourself,
And for your friend ; be busy even in vain
Rather than teize her sated appetites.
Who never fasts, no banquet e'er enjoys ;
Who never toils or watches, never sleeps.
Let nature rest : And when the taste of joy
Grows keen, indulge ; but shun satiety.
'Tis not for mortals always to be blest.
But him the least the dull or painful hours
Of life oppress, whom sober Sense conducts,
And Virtue thro' this labyrinth we tread.
Virtue and Sense I mean not to disjoin ;
Virtue and Sense are one : and trust me, he
Who has not virtue is not truly wise.
Virtue (for mere good-nature is a fool)
Is sense and spirit, with humanity :
'Tis sometimes angry, and its frown confounds ;
'Tis even vindictive, but in vengeance just.

Knaves

CHAP. XVIII. DIDACTIC PIECES. 91

Knaves fain would laugh at it; some great ones dare;

But at his heart the most undaunted son
Of fortune dreads its name and awful charms.

To noblest uses this determines wealth:

This is the solid pomp of prosperous days:

The peace and shelter of adversity.

And if you pant for glory, build your fame

On this foundation, which the secret shock

Defies of Envy and all-sapping Time.

The gaudy gloss of Fortune only strikes

The vulgar eye: The suffrage of the wise,

The praise that's worth ambition, is attain'd

By Sense alone, and dignity of mind.

Virtue the strength and beauty of the soul,

Is the best gift of heaven: a happiness

That even above the smiles and frowns of fate

Exalts great Nature's favourites: a wealth

That ne'er encumbers, nor to baser hands

Can be transferr'd: it is the only good

Man justly boasts of, or can call his own.

Riches are oft by guilt and baseness earn'd;

Or dealt by chance, to shield a lucky knave,

Or throw a cruel sun-shine on a fool.

But for one end, one much-neglected use,

Are riches worth your care (for Nature's wants

Are few, and without opulence supplied)

This noble end is to produce the Soul:

To show the virtues in their fairest light;

To make Humanity the Minister

Of bounteous Providence; and teach the breast

That generous luxury the Gods enjoy.

Thus, in his graver vein, the friendly Sage

Sometimes declaim'd. Of Right and Wrong, he taught

Truths as refin'd as ever Athens heard;

And (strange to tell) he practis'd what he preach'd.

AGAINST INDOLENCE;

AN EPISTLE.

IN frolick's hour, ere serious thought had birth,
 There was a time, my dear CORNWALLIS, when
 The muse would take me on her airy wing
 And waft to views romantic; there present
 Some motly vision, shade and sun: the cliff
 O'erhanging, sparkling brooks, and ruins grey;
 Bade me meanders trace, and catch the form
 Of varying clouds, and rainbows learn to paint.

Sometimes ambition, brushing by, wou'd twitch
 My mantle, and with winning look sublime
 Allure to follow. What tho' steep the track,
 Her mountain's top would over pay when climb'd.
 The scaler's toil; her temple there was fine,
 And lovely thence the prospects. She could tell Where laurels grew, whence many a wreath antique;

But more advis'd to shun the barren twig,
 (What is immortal verdure without fruit?)
 And woo some thriving art: her num'rous mines
 Were open to the searcher's skill and pains.

Caught by th' harangue, heart beat, and flutt'ring pulse

Sounded irregular marches to be gone——
 What, pause a moment when Ambition calls?
 No, the blood gallops to the distant goal,
 And throbs to reach it. Let the lame sit still.
 When Fortune gentle, at the hill's verge extreme,
 Array'd in decent garb, but somewhat thin,
 Smiling approach'd; and what occasion ask'd,
 Of climbing? She already provident
 Had cater'd well, if stomach cou'd digest
 Her viand, and a palate not too nice.
 Unfit she said, for perilous attempt,
 That manly limb requir'd, and sinew tough.

She

She took, and laid me in a vale remote,
 Amid the gloomy scene of fir and yew,
 On poppy beds, where Morpheus strew'd the ground:
 Obscurity her curtain round me drew,
 And syren Sloth a dull quietus sung.

Sithence no fairy lights, no quick'ning ray,
 Nor stir of pulse, nor objects to entice
 Abroad the spirits; but the cloyster'd heart
 Sits squat at home, like pagod in a niche
 Obscure, or grandees with nod-watching eye,
 And folded arms, in presence of the throne,
 Turk, or Indostan.—Cities, forums, courts
 And prating sanhedrims, and drumming wars,
 Affect no more than stories told to bed
 Lethargic, which at intervals the sick
 Hears and forgets, and wakes to doze again.
 Instead of converse and variety,
 The same trite round, the same stale silent scene:
 Such are thy comforts, blessed Solitude!
 But Innocence is there, but Peace all kind,
 And simple Quiet with her downy couch,
 Meads lowing, tune of birds, and lapse of streams,
 And Saunter with a book, and warbling Muse,
 In praise of hawthorns—Life's whole business this?
 Is it to bask i' th' sun? if so a snail
 Were happy crawling on the southern wall.

Why sits Content upon a cottage-hill
 At even tide, and blesteth the coarse meal
 In sooty corner? why sweet slumbers wait
 Th' hard pallat? not because from haunt remote Sequester'd in a dingle's bushy lap.
 'Tis labour makes the peasant's sav'ry fare,
 And works out his repose: for ease must ask,
 The leave of diligence to be enjoy'd.

Oh! listen not to that enchantress Ease,
 With seeming smile; her palatable cup
 By standing grows insipid; and beware
 The bottom, for there's poison in the lees.
 What health impair'd, and crowds inactive maim'd!
 What daily martyrs to her sluggish cause!

Less strict devoir the Rufs and Perfian claim
Despotic; and, as subjects long inur'd
To servile burthen, grow supine and tame,
So fares it with our Sov'reign and her train.

What tho' with lure fallacious she pretend
From worldly bondage to set free, what gain
Her votaries? What avails from iron chains
Exempt, if rosy fetters bind as fast?

Bestir, and answer your creation's end.
Think we that man with vig'rous pow'r endow'd,
And room to stretch, was destin'd to sit still?
Sluggards are Nature's rebels, slight her laws,
Nor live up to the terms on which they hold
Their vital lease. Laborious terms and hard;
But such the tenure of our earthly state!
Riches and fame are Industry's reward;
The nimble runner courses Fortune down,
And then he banquets, for she feeds the bold.

Think what you owe your country, what yourself.
If splendor charm not, yet avoid the scorn
That treads on lowly stations. Think of some Assiduous booby mounting o'er your head,
And thence with saucy grandeur looking down:
Think of (Reflection's stab!) the pitying friend
With shoulder shrug'd and sorry. Think that Time
Has golden minutes, if discreetly seiz'd:
And if some sad example, indolent,
To warn and scare be wanting——think of me.

ELEGY TO A YOUNG NOBLEMAN LEAVING THE UNIVERSITY.

ERE yet, ingenuous Youth, thy steps retire
From Cam's smooth margin, and the peaceful vale,

Where science call'd thee to her studious quire,
And met thee musing in her cloysters pale;
O! let thy friend (and may he boast the name)
Breathe from his artless reed one parting lay;
A lay

A lay like this thy early Virtues claim,
And this let voluntary Friendship pay.
Yet know the time arrives, the dangerous time,
When all those Virtues, opening how so fair,
Transplanted to the world's tempestuous clime,
Must learn each Passion's boisterous breath to bear.
There if Ambition pestilent and pale,
Or Luxury should taint their vernal glow;
If cold Self-interest, with her chilling gale,
Shou'd blast th' unfolding blossoms ere they blow;
If mimic hues, by Art, or Fashion spread,
Their genuine, simple colouring should supply;
O! with them may these laureate honours fade;
And with them (if it can) my Friendship die.
—And do not blame, if tho' thyself inspire,
Cautious I strike the panegyric string:
The muse full oft pursues a meteor fire,
And, vainly venturous, soars on waxen wing.
Too actively awake at Friendship's voice,
The Poet's bosom pours the fervent strain,
Till sad Reflection blames the hasty choice,
And oft invokes Oblivion's aid in vain.
Go then, my Friend, nor let thy candid breast
Condemn me, if I check the plausible string;
Go to the wayward world; compleat the rest;
Be, what the purest Muse would wish to sing.
Be still thyself; that open path of Truth,
Which led thee here, let Manhood firm pursue;
Retain the sweet simplicity of Youth,
And, all thy virtue dictates, dare to do.
Still scorn, with conscious pride, the mask of Art;
On Vice's front let fearful caution lour,
And teach the diffident, discreeter part
Of Knaves that plot, and fools that fawn for Power.
So, round thy brow when Age's honours spread,
When Death's cold hand unstrings thy Mason's lyre,
When the green turf lies lightly on his head,
Thy worth shall some superior bard inspire:
He, to the amplest bounds of Time's domain,
On Rapture's plume shall give thy name to fly;
For

For trust, with rev'rence trust this Sabine strain :

“ The Muse forbids the virtuous Man to die.”

ON THE MISERIES OF HUMAN LIFE.

AH little think the gay licentious proud,
Whom pleasure, power, and affluence surround;

They who their thoughtless hours in giddy mirth,
And wanton, often cruel, riot waste :

Ah little think they, while they dance along,
How many feel, this very moment death,
And all the sad variety of pain :

How many sink in the devouring flood,
Or more devouring flame : how many bleed,
By shameful variance betwixt Man and Man :

How many pine in want, and dungeon glooms ;
Shut from the common air, and common use

Of their own limbs : how many drink the cup
Of baleful grief, or eat the bitter bread

Of misery : fore pierc'd by wintry winds,
How many shrink into the sordid hut

Of cheerless poverty : how many shake
With all the fiercer tortures of the mind,

Unbounded passion, madness, guilt, remorse ;

Whence tumbled headlong from the height of life

They furnish matter for the tragic muse :

Even in the vale, where wisdom loves to dwell,

With friendship, peace, and contemplation join'd,

How many rack'd with honest passions, droop

In deep retir'd distress : how many stand

Around the death-bed of their dearest friends,

And point the parting anguish.—Thought fond Man

Of these, and all the thousand nameless ills,

That one incessant struggle render life,

One scene of toil, of suffering, and of fate,
 Vice in his high career would stand appall'd,
 And heedless rambling Impulse lea'd to think;
 The conscious heart of charity would warm,
 And her wide wish benevolence dilate;
 The social tear would rise, the social sigh;
 And into clear perfection, gradual bliss,
 Refining still, the social passions work.

REFLECTIONS ON A FUTURE STATE.

TIS done!—dread WINTER spreads his latest glooms,

And reigns tremendous o'er the conquer'd year.
 How dead the vegetable kingdom lies!
 How dumb the tuneful! horror wide extends
 His desolate domain. Behold, fond Man!
 See here thy pictur'd life, pass some few years,
 Thy flowering Spring, thy Summer's ardent strength,
 The sober Autumn fading into age,
 And pale concluding Winter comes at last,
 And shuts the scene. Ah! whither now are fled
 Those dreams of goodness? those unsolid hopes
 Of happiness? those longings after fame?
 Those restless cares? those busy bustling days?
 Those gay-spent festive nights? those veering thoughts

Lost between good and ill, that shar'd thy life?
 All now are vanish'd! VIRTUE sole survivor,
 Immortal, never-failing friend of Man,
 His guide to happiness on high.—And see!
 'Tis come, the glorious morn! the second birth
 Of heaven, and earth! awakening Nature hears
 The new creating word, and starts to life,
 In every heightened form, from pain and death
 For ever free. The great eternal scheme
 Involving all, and in a perfect whole

Uniting, as the prospect wider spreads,
 To reason's eye refin'd clear up apace,
 Ye vainly wise, ye blind presumptuous ! now,
 Confounded in the dust, adore that POWER,
 And WISDOM oft arraign'd : see now the cause,
 Why unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
 And dy'd, neglected : why the good Man's share
 In life was gall and bitterness of soul :
 Why the lone widow, and, her orphans pin'd,
 In starving solitude ; while luxury,
 In palaces, lay straining her low thought,
 To form unreal wants : why heaven-born truth,
 And moderation fair, wore the red marks
 Of superstition's scourge : why licens'd pain,
 That cruel spoiler, that embosom'd foe,
 Imbitter'd all our blifs. Ye good distress !
 Ye noble few ! who here unbending stand
 Beneath life's pressure, yet bear up a while,
 And what your bounded view, which only saw
 A little part, deem'd Evil is no more :
 The storms of WINTERY TIME will quickly pass,
 And one unbecoming SPRING incircle all.

THOMSON.

C H A P. XXIII.

ON PROCRASTINATION.

BE wise to-day ; 'tis madness to defer ;
 Next day the fatal precedent will plead ;
 Thus on, till wisdom is push'd out of life.
 Procrastination is the thief of time ;
 Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
 And to the mercies of a moment leaves
 The vast concerns of an eternal scene.

Of man's miraculous mistakes, this bears
 The palm, " That all men are about to live,"
 For ever on the brink of being born.
 All pay themselves the compliment to think

They,

They, one day, shall not drivel ; and their pride
 On this reversion takes up ready prize ;
 At least, their own ; their future selves applauds ;
 How excellent that life they ne'er will lead !
 Time lodg'd in their own hands is Folly's vails ;
 That lodg'd in Fate's, to Wisdom they consign ;
 The thing they can't but purpose, they postpone ;
 'Tis not in Folly, not to scorn a fool :

And scarce in human Wisdom to do more.
 All promise is poor dilatory man,
 And that thro' ev'ry stage. When young, indeed,
 In full content we, sometimes, nobly rest,
 Unanxious for ourselves ; and only wish,
 As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise.
 At thirty man suspects himself a fool ;
 Knows it at forty, and reforms his plan ;
 At fifty chides his infamous delay,
 Pushes his prudent purpose to Resolve ;
 In all the magnanimity of thought
 Resolves, and re-resolves ; then dies the same.

And why ? Because he thinks himself immortal.
 All men think all men mortal, but themselves ;
 Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate
 Strikes thro' their wounded hearts the sudden dread ;
 But their hearts wounded, like the wounded air,
 Soon close ; where past the shaft, no trace is found.
 As from the wing no scar the sky retains ;
 The parted wave no furrow from the keel ;
 So dies in human hearts the thought of death.
 Ev'n with the tender tear which nature sheds
 O'er those we love, we drop it in the grave.

THE PAIN ARISING FROM VIRTUOUS EMOTIONS ATTENDED WITH PLEA-SURE.

— — — BEHOLD the ways
Of Heav'n's eternal destiny to man,
For ever just, benevolent and wise :
That VIRTUE's awful steps, howe'er pursued
By vexing fortune and intrusive PAIN,
Should never be divided from her chaste,
Her fair attendant, PLEASURE. Need I urge
Thy tardy thought through all the various round
Of this existence, that thy soft'ning soul
At length may learn what energy the hand
Of virtue mingles in the bitter tide
Of passion swelling with distress and pain,
To mitigate the sharp with gracious drops
Of cordial pleasure ? Ask the faithful youth,
While the cold urn of her whom long he lov'd
So often fills his arms ; so often draws
His lonely footsteps at the silent hour,
To pay the mournful tribute of his tears ?
O ! he will tell thee, that the wealth of worlds
Should ne'er seduce his bosom to forego
That sacred hour, when stealing from the noise
Of care and envy, sweet remembrance sooths
With virtue's kindest looks his aching breast,
And turns his tears to rapture ? — Ask the crowd
Which flies impatient from the village-walk
To climb the neigh'ring cliffs, when far below
The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
Some helpless bark ; while sacred pity melts
The gen'ral eye, or terror's icy hand
Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair ;
While every mother closer to her breast
Catches her child, and pointing where the waves
Foam thro' the shatter'd vessel, shrieks aloud,

As one poor wretch that spreads his piteous arms
 For succour, swallow'd by the roaring surge,
 As now another, dash'd against the rock,
 Drops lifeless down : O deemest thou indeed
 No kind endearment here by nature giv'n
 To mutual terror and compassion's tears ?
 To sweetly-melting softness which attracts,
 O'er all the edge of pain, the social pow'rs
 To this their proper action and their end ?
 Ask thy own heart ; when at the midnight hour,
 Slow thro' that studious gloom thy pausing eye
 Led by the glimm'ring taper moves around
 The sacred volumes of the dead, the songs
 Of Grecian bards, and records writ by fame
 For Grecian heroes, where the present pow'r
 Of heaven and earth surveys th' immortal page,
 E'en as a father blessing, while he reads
 The praises of his son ; if then thy soul,
 Spurning the yoke of these inglorious days,
 Mix in their deeds and kindle with their flame ;
 Say, when the prospect blackens on thy view,
 When rooted from the base, heroic states
 Mourn in the dust and tremble at the frown
 Of curst ambition ;—when the pious band
 Of youths that fought for freedom and their fires
 Lie side by side in gore ;—when ruffian-pride
 Usurps the throne of justice, turns the pomp
 Of public pow'r, the majesty of rule,
 The sword, the laurel, and the purple robe,
 To slavish empty pageants, to adorn
 A tyrant's walk, and glitter in the eyes
 Of such as bow the knee ;—when honour'd urns
 Of patriots and of chiefs, the awful bust
 And storied arch, to glut the coward-rage
 Of regal envy, strew the public way
 With hallow'd ruins ;—when the muse's haunt,
 The marble porch where wisdom wont to talk
 With Socrates or Tully, hears no more,
 Save the hoarse jargon of contentious monks,
 Or female superstition's midnight pray'r ;—
 When ruthless rapine from the hand of time

Tears the destroying scythe, with surer blow
 To sweep the works of glory from their base ;
 Till desolation o'er the grass-grown street
 Expands his raven-wings, and up the wall,
 Where senates once the pride of monarchs doom'd,
 Hisses the gliding snake thro' hoary weeds
 That clasp the mould'ring column ;—thus defac'd,
 Thus widely mournful when the prospect thrills
 Thy beating bosom, when the patriot's tear
 Starts from thine eye, and thy extended arm
 In fancy hurls the thunderbolt of Jove
 To fire the impious wreath on Philip's brow,
 Or dash Octavius from the trophied car ;—
 Say, does thy secret soul refine to taste
 The big distress ? Or would'st thou then exchange
 Those heart-ennobling sorrows, for the lot
 Of him who sits amid the gaudy heap
 Of mute barbarians bending to his nod,
 And bears aloft his gold-invested front,
 And says within himself, “ I am a king,
 “ And wherefore should the clam'rous voice of woe

“ Intrude upon mine ear ? ”—The baleful dregs
 Of these late ages, this inglorious draught
 Of servitude and folly, have not yet,
 Blest be th' Eternal Ruler of the world !
 Defil'd to such a depth of sordid shame
 The native honours of the human soul,
 Nor so effac'd the image of its fire.

SAY, what is taste, but the internal pow'rs
 Active, and strong, and feelingly alive
 To each fine impulse ? a discerning sense
 Of decent and sublime, with quick disgust
 From things deform'd or disarrang'd, or gross

In

In species? This nor gems, nor stores of gold,
 Nor purple state, nor culture can bestow;
 But GOD alone, when first his active hand
 Imprints the sacred bias of the soul.
 He, mighty Parent! wise and just in all,
 Free as the vital breeze or light of heav'n,
 Reveals the charms of nature. Ask the swain
 Who journeys homeward from a summer day's Long labour, why, forgotten of his toils
 And due repose, he loiters to behold
 The sunshine gleaming as thro' amber clouds
 O'er all the western sky; full soon, I ween,
 His rude expressions and untutor'd airs,
 Beyond the pow'r of language, will unfold
 The form of beauty smiling at his heart,
 How lovely! how commanding! But tho' heav'n
 In every breast hath sown these early seeds
 Of love and admiration, yet in vain,
 Without fair culture's kind parental aid,
 Without enlivening suns, and genial show'rs
 And shelter from the blast, in vain we hope
 The tender plant should rear its blooming head,
 Or yield the harvest promis'd in its spring.
 Nor yet will every soil with equal stores
 Repay the tiller's labour; or attend
 His will, obsequious, whether to produce
 The olive or the laurel, Different minds
 Incline to different objects; one pursues
 The vast alone, the wonderful, the wild;
 Another sighs for harmony, and grace,
 And gentlest beauty. Hence when lightning fires
 The arch of heav'n, and thunders rock the ground;
 When furious whirlwinds rend the howling air,
 And ocean, groaning from his lowest bed,
 Heaves his tempestuous billows to the sky;
 Amid the mighty uproar, while below
 The nations tremble, Shakespear looks abroad
 From some high cliff, superior, and enjoys
 The elemental war. But Waller longs,
 All on the margin of some flow'ry stream,
 To spread his careless limbs amid the cool

Of plantane shades, and to the list'ning deer,
 The tale of slighted vows and love's disdain
 Resounds soft-whirling all the live-long day :
 Consenting Zephyr sighs ; the weeping rill
 Joins in his plaint, melodious ; mute the groves ;
 And hill and dale with all their echoes mourn.
 Such and so various are the tastes of men.

THE PLEASURES ARISING FROM A CULTIVATED IMAGINATION.

OBLEST of heav'n, whom not the languid songs
 Of luxury, the Siren ! not the bribes
 Of sordid wealth, nor all the gaudy spoils
 Of pageant honour, can seduce to leave
 Those ever-blooming sweets, which from the store
 Of nature fair imagination culls
 To charm th' enliven'd soul ! What tho' not all
 Of mortal offspring can attain the height
 Of envied life ; tho' only few possess
 Patrician treasures or imperial state ;
 Yet nature's care, to all her children just,
 With richer treasures and an ampler state
 Endows at large whatever happy man
 Will deign to use them. His the city's pomp,
 The rural honour his. Whate'er adorns
 The princely dome, the column and the arch,
 The breathing marbles and the sculptur'd gold
 Beyond the proud possessor's narrow claim,
 His tuneful breast enjoys. For him, the spring
 Distils her dews, and from the silken gem
 Its lucid leaves unfolds : for him, the hand
 Of autumn tinges every fertile branch
 With blooming gold, and blushes like the morn.
 Each passing hour sheds tribute from her wing ;
 And still new beauties meet his lonely walk,
 And loves unselt attract him. Not a breeze

Flies

Flies o'er the meadow, not a cloud imbibes
 The setting sun's effugence, not a strain
 From all the tenants of the warbling shade
 Ascends, but whence his bosom can partake
 Fresh pleasure, unprov'd. Nor thence partakes
 Fresh pleasure only : for th' attentive mind,
 By this harmonious action on her pow'rs,
 Becomes herself harmonious : wont so oft
 In outward things to meditate the charm
 Of sacred order, soon she seeks at home
 To find a kindred order to exert
 Within herself this elegance of love,
 This fair-inspir'd delight : her temper'd pow'rs
 Refine at length, and every passion wears
 A chaster, milder, more attractive mein.
 But if to ample prospects, if to gaze
 On nature's form, where negligent of all
 These lesser graces, she assumes the port
 Of that eternal majesty that weigh'd
 The world's foundations, if to these the mind
 Exalts her daring eye ; then mightier far
 Will be the change, and nobler. Would the forms
 Of servile custom cramp her gen'rous pow'rs ?
 Would sordid policies, the barb'rous growth
 Of ignorance and rapine, bow her down
 To tame pursuits, to indolence and fear ?
 Lo ! she appeals to nature, to the winds
 And rolling waves, the sun's unwearied course,
 The elements and seasons : all declare
 For what th' eternal Maker has ordain'd
 The pow'rs of man : we feel within ourselves
 His energy divine : he tells the heart,
 He meant, he made us to behold and love
 What he beholds and loves, the general orb
 Of life and being ; to be great like him,
 Beneficent and active. Thus the men
 Whom nature's works can charm, with God himself
 Hold converse : grow familiar, day by day,
 With his conceptions, act upon his plan ;
 And form to his, the relish of their souls.

ARGUMENTATIVE PIECES.

C H A P. I.

O N A N G E R.

QUESTION. WHETHER Anger ought to be suppressed entirely, or only to be confined within the bounds of moderation?

THOSE who maintain that resentment is blameable only in the excess, support their opinion with such arguments as these :

SINCE Anger is natural and useful to man, entirely to banish it from our breast, would be an equally foolish and vain attempt : for as it is difficult, and next to impossible to oppose nature with success ; so it were imprudent, if we had it in our power, to cast away the weapons, with which she has furnished us for our defence. The best armour against injustice is a proper degree of spirit, to repel the wrongs that are done, or designed against us : but if we divest ourselves of all resentment, we shall perhaps prove too irresolute and languid, both in resisting the attacks of injustice, and inflicting punishment upon those, who have committed it. We shall therefore sink into contempt, and by the tameness of our spirit, shall invite the malicious to abuse and affront us. Nor will others fail to deny us the regard, which is due from them, if once they think us incapable of resentment. To remain unmoved at gross injuries, has the appearance of stupidity, and will make

make us despicable and mean, in the eyes of many who are not to be influenced by any thing but their fears.

AND as a moderate share of resentment is useful in its effects, so it is innocent in itself, nay often commendable. The virtue of mildness is no less remote from insensibility, on the one hand, than from fury, on the other. It implies, that we are angry only upon proper occasions, and in a due degree; that we are never transported beyond the bounds of decency, or indulge a deep and lasting resentment; that we do not follow, but lead our passion, governing it as our servant, not submitting ourselves to it as our master. Under these regulations it is certainly excusable, when moved only by private wrongs: and being excited by the injuries, which others suffer, it bespeaks a generous mind and deserves commendation. Shall a good man feel no indignation against injustice and barbarity? not even when he is witness to shocking instances of them? when he sees a friend basely and cruelly treated; when he observes,

Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of th' unworthy takes;

SHALL he still enjoy himself in perfect tranquillity? Will it be a crime, if he conceives the least resentment? Will it not rather be somewhat criminal, if he is destitute of it? in such cases we are commonly so far from being ashamed of our anger, as something mean, that we are proud of it, and confess it openly, as what we count laudable and meritorious.

THE truth is, there seems to be something manly, and we are bold to say, something virtuous in a just and well conducted resentment. In the mean time, let us not be suspected of endeavouring to vindicate rage, and peevishness, and implacable resentment. No; such is their deformity, so horrid and manifest are their evils they produce, that they do not admit of any defence or justification. We condemn, we detest them, as unnatural, brutish, unmanly and monstrous.

monstrous. All we contend for, is, that it is better to be moderate in our resentment, than to suppress it altogether. Let us therefore keep it under a strict discipline, and carefully restrain it within the bounds which reason prescribes, with regard to the occasion, degree and continuance of it. But let us not presume to extirpate any of those affections, which the wisdom of God has implanted in us, which are so nicely balanced, and so well adjusted to each other, that by destroying one of them, we may perhaps disorder and blemish the whole frame of our nature.

TO these arguments, those who adopt the opinion that Anger should be entirely suppressed, reply :

You tell us, anger is natural to man ; but nothing is more natural to man, than reason, mildness and benevolence. Now with what propriety can we call that natural to any creature, which impairs and opposes the most essential and distinguishing parts of its constitution ? Sometimes indeed we may call that natural to a species, which being found in most of them is not produced by art or custom. That anger is in this sense natural, we readily grant ; but deny that we therefore cannot, or may not lawfully extinguish it. Nature has committed to our management the faculties of the mind, as well as the members of the body ; and, as when any of the latter become pernicious to the whole, we cut them off and cast them away ; in like manner, when any of our affections are become hurtful and useless in our frame, by cutting them off, we do not in the least counteract the intention of nature. Now such is anger to a wise man. To fools and cowards it is a necessary evil ; but to a person of moderate sense and virtue, it is an evil, which has no advantage attending it. The harm it must do him is very apparent. It must ruffle his temper ; make him less agreeable to his friends, disturb his reason, and unfit him for discharging the duties of life in a becoming manner. By only diminishing his passion, he may lessen, but cannot remove the evil, for the only way to get clear of the one, is by entirely dismissing the other.
for

How then will anger be so useful to him, as to make it worth his while to retain it in any degree? He may defend his own rights; assist an injured friend; prosecute and punish a villain; I say his prudence and friendship, his public spirit and calm resolution will enable him to do all this, and to do it in a much more safe, proper and effectual manner, without the assistance of anger, than with it. He will be despised and neglected, you say, if he appears to have no resentment. You should rather say, if he appears to have no sedate wisdom and courage; for these qualities will be sufficient of themselves to secure him from contempt, and maintain him in the possession of his just authority. Nor does any thing commonly lessen us more in the eyes of others, than our own passion. It often exposeth us to the contempt and derision of those, who are not in our power; and if it makes us fear'd, it also makes us proportionably hated, by our inferiors and dependants. Let the influence it gives us be ever so great, that man must pay very dear for his power, who procures it at the expence of his own tranquility and peace.

BESIDES, the imitation of anger, which is easily formed, will produce the same effect upon others, as if the passion was real. If therefore to quicken the slow, to rouse the inattentive, and restrain the fierce, it is sometimes expedient, that they believe you are moved, you may put on the outward appearance of resentment. Thus you may obtain the end of anger, without the danger and vexation that attend it; and preserve your authority, without forfeiting the peace of your mind.

HOWEVER manly and vigorous anger may be thought, it is in fact, but a weak principle, compared with the sedate resolution of a wise and virtuous man. The one is uniform and permanent, like the strength of a person in perfect health; the other like a force, which proceedeth from a fever, is violent for a time, but it soon leaves the mind more feeble than before. To him therefore who is armed with a proper firmness of soul, no degree of passion can be useful in any respect. And to say it can ever be laudable and virtuous, is indeed a sufficiently bold assertion. For the most part we blame it in others, and though we are apt to be indulgent enough to our own faults, we are often ashamed of it in ourselves. Hence it is common to hear men excusing themselves, and seriously declaring, they were not angry, when they have given unquestionable proofs to the contrary. But do we not commend him, who resents the injuries done to a friend or innocent person? Yes, we commend him; yet not for his passion, but for that generosity and friendship, of which it is the evidence. For let any one impartially consider, which of these characters he esteems the better; his, who interests himself in the injuries of his friend, and zealously defends him with perfect calmness and serenity of temper; or his, who pursues the same conduct under the influence of resentment.

If anger then is neither useful nor commendable, it is certainly the part of wisdom, to suppress it entirely. We should rather confine it, you tell us, within certain bounds. But how shall we ascertain the limits, to which it may, and beyond which it ought not to pass! When we receive a manifest injury, it seems we may resent it, provided we do it with moderation. When we suffer a worse abuse, our anger. I suppose, may rise somewhat higher. Now, as the degrees of injustice are infinite, if our anger must always be proportioned to the occasion, it may possibly proceed to the utmost extravagance. Shall we set bounds to our resentment, while we are yet calm? how can we be assured, that being once yet loose, it will not carry us beyond them; or shall we give passion the reins, imagining we can resume them at pleasure, or trusting it will tire or stop itself, as soon as it has run to its proper length; as well might

might we think of giving laws to a tempest; as well might we endeavour to run mad by rule and method.

IN reality, it is much easier to keep ourselves void of resentment, than to restrain it from excess, when it has gained admission; for if reason, while her strength is yet entire, is not able to preserve her dominion, what can she do when her enemy has in part prevailed and weakened her force? To use the illustration of an excellent author, we can prevent the beginnings of some things, whose progress afterwards we cannot hinder. We can fear to cast ourselves down from a precipice, but if once we have taken the fatal leap, we must descend, whether we will, or no. Thus the mind, if duly cautious, may stand firm upon the rock of tranquillity; but if she rashly forsakes the summit, she can scarce recover herself, but is hurried away downwards by her own passion, with increasing violence.

Do not say, that we exhort you to attempt that which is impossible. Nature has put it in our power to resist the motions of anger. We only plead inability, when we want an excuse for our own negligence. Was a passionate man to forfeit a hundred pounds, as often as he was angry, or was he sure he must die the next moment after the first sally of his passion, we should find, he had a great command of his temper, whenever he could prevail upon himself to exercise a proper attention about it. And shall we not esteem it worthy of equal attention; worthy of our utmost care and pains to obtain that immoveable tranquillity of mind, without which we cannot relish, either life itself, or any one of its employments?—Upon the whole then, we both may and ought, not merely to restrain, but extirpate anger. It is impatient of rule; in proportion as it prevails, it will disquiet our minds; it has nothing commendable in itself, nor will it answer any valuable purpose in life.

VIRTUE OUR HIGHEST INTEREST.

I FIND myself existing upon a little spot, surrounded every way by an immense unknown expansion.—Where am I? What sort of a place do I inhabit? It is exactly accommodated, in every instance to my convenience? Is there no excess of cold, none of heat, to offend me? Am I never annoyed by animals, either of my own kind, or a different? Is every thing subservient to me, as though I had ordered all myself?—No—nothing like it—the farthest from it possible——The world appears not then originally made for the private convenience of me alone?—It does not.—But is it not possible so to accommodate it, by my own particular industry?——If to accommodate man and beast, heaven and earth; if this be beyond me, 'tis not possible—What consequence then follows? Or can there be any other than this—If I seek an interest of my own, detached from that of others; I seek an interest which is chimerical, and can never have existence?

How then must I determine? Have I no interest at all?—If I have not, I am a fool for staying here. 'Tis a smoaky house, and the sooner out of it, the better.—But why no interest?—Can I be contented with none, but one separate and detached?—Is a social interest joined with others such an absurdity, as not to be admitted? The bee, the beaver, and the tribes of herding animals, are enough to convince me, that the thing is, somewhere at least, possible. How then am I assured, that 'tis not equally true of man?——Admit it; and what follows?—If so, then Honour and Justice are my interest—then the whole train of Moral Virtues are my interest; without some portion of which, not even thieves can maintain society.

BUT

BUT farther still—I stop not here—I pursue this social interest, as far as I can trace my several relations. I pass from my own stock, my own neighbourhood, my own nation, to the whole race of mankind, as dispersed throughout the earth—Am I not related to them all, by the mutual aids of commerce ; by the general intercourse of arts and letters ; by that common nature, of which we all participate ?—Again—I must have food and cloathing.—Without a proper genial warmth, I instantly perish.—Am I not related, in this view, to the very earth itself ? To the distant sun, from whose beams I derive vigour ? To that stupendous course and order of the infinite host of heaven, by which the times and seasons uniformly pass on ?—Were this order once confounded, I could not probably survive a moment ; so absolutely do I depend on this common general welfare.

WHAT then have I to do, but to enlarge Virtue into Piety ? Not only honour and justice, and what I owe to man, is my interest ; but gratitude also, acquiescence, resignation, adoration, and all I owe to this great polity, and its greater Governor, our common Parent.

BUT if all these moral and divine habits be my interest, I need not surely seek for a better. I have an interest compatible with the spot on which I live—I have an interest which may exist, without altering the plan of Providence ; without mending or marring the general order of events.—I can bear whatever happens with manlike magnanimity ; can be contented, and fully happy in the good, which I possess ; and can pass through this turbid, this fickle, fleeting period, without bewailings, or envyings, or murmurings, or complaints.

THE SAME SUBJECT.

ALL men pursue Good, and would be happy, if they knew how ; not happy for minutes, and miserable for hours, but happy, if possible, through every part of their existence. Either therefore there is a good of this steady durable kind, or there is none. If none, then all good must be transient and uncertain ; and if so, an object of lowest value, which can little deserve either our attention, or inquiry. But if there be a better good, such a good as we are seeking ; like every other thing, it must be derived from some cause ; and that cause must be either external, internal, or mixed, in as much as except these three, there is no other possible. Now a steady, durable good, cannot be derived from an external cause, by reason all derived from externals must fluctuate, as they fluctuate. By the same rule, not from a mixture of the two ; because the part which is external will proportionally destroy its essence. What then remains but the cause internal ; the very cause which we have supposed, when we place the Sovereign Good in Mind—in Rectitude of Conduct ?

ON THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL,

AMONG other excellent arguments for the Immortality of the Soul, there is one drawn from the perpetual progress of the soul to its perfection without a possibility of ever arriving at it ; which is a hint that I do not remember to have seen opened and improved by others who have written on this subject, subject, though it seems to me to carry a great weight with it. How can it enter into the thoughts of man, that the soul, which is capable of such immense perfections, and of receiving new improvements to all eternity, shall fall away into nothing almost as soon as it is created? Are such abilities made for no purpose? A brute arrives at a point of perfection that he can never pass: in a few years he has all the endowments he is capable of; and were he to live ten thousand more, would be the same thing he is at present. Were a human soul thus at a stand in her accomplishments, were her faculties to be full blown, and incapable of farther enlargements, I could imagine it might fall away insensibly, and drop at once into a state of annihilation. But can we believe a thinking being that is in a perpetual progress of improvements, and travelling on from perfection to perfection, after having just looked abroad into the works of its Creator, and made a few discoveries of his infinite goodness, wisdom, and power, must perish at her first setting out, and in the very beginning of her enquiries?

MAN, considered as in his present state, seems only sent into the world to propagate his kind. He provides himself with a successor, and immediately quits his post to make room for him.

HE does not seem born to enjoy life, but to deliver it down to others. This is not surprising to consider in animals, which are formed for our use, and can finish their business in a short life. The silk-worm, after having spun her task, lays her eggs and dies. But in this life man can never take in his full measure of knowledge; nor has he time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Would an infinitely wise Being make such glorious creatures for so mean a purpose? Can he delight in the production of such abortive intelligences, such short-lived reasonable beings? Would he give us talents that are not to be exerted? Capacities that are never to be gratified? How can we find

find that wisdom which shines through all his works, in the formation of man, without looking on this world as only a nursery for the next, and believing that the several generations of rational creatures, which rise up and disappear in such quick successions, are only to receive their first rudiments of existence here, and afterwards to be transplanted into a more friendly climate, where they may spread and flourish to all eternity?

THERE is not, in my opinion, a more pleasing and triumphant consideration in religion than this of the perpetual progress which the soul makes towards the perfection of its nature, without ever arriving at a period in it. To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity; that she will be still adding virtue to virtue, and knowledge to knowledge; carries in it something wonderfully agreeable to that ambition which is natural to the mind of man. Nay, it must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of resemblance.

METHINKS this single consideration, of the progress of a finite spirit to perfection, will be sufficient to extinguish all envy in inferior nature, and all contempt in superior. That cherubim, which now appears as a God to a human soul, knows very well that the period will come about in eternity, when the human soul shall be as perfect as he himself now is: nay, when she shall look down upon that degree of perfection, as much as she now falls short of it. It is true the higher nature still advances, and by that means preserves his distance and superiority in the scale of being; but he knows that, how high soever the station is of which he stands possessed at present, the inferior nature will at length mount up to it, and shine forth in the same degree of glory.

WITH what astonishment and veneration may we look into our souls, where there are such hidden stores stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection ! We know not yet what we shall be, nor will it ever enter into the heart of man to conceive the glory that will be always in reserve for him. The soul, considered in relation to its Creator, is like one of those mathematical lines that may draw nearer to another to all eternity, without a possibility of touching it : and can there be a thought so transporting, as to consider ourselves in these perpetual approaches to Him, who is not only the standard of perfection, but of happiness !

JUNIUS BRUTUS OVER THE DEAD BODY OF L U C R E T I A.

YES, noble lady, I swear by this blood, which was once so pure, and which nothing but royal villainy could have polluted, that I will pursue Lucius Tarquinius the proud, his wicked wife, and their children, with fire and sword ; nor will I ever suffer any of that family, or of any other whatsoever, to be King in Rome : Ye Gods, I call you to witness this my oath !—There, Romans, turn your eyes to that sad spectacle—the daughter of Lucretius, Collatinus's wife—she died by her own hand. See there a noble lady, whom the lust of a Tarquin reduced to the necessity of being her own executioner, to attest her innocence. Hospitably entertained by her as a kinsman of her husband's, Sextus, the perfidious guest, became her brutal ravisher. The chaste, the generous Lucretia could not survive the insult. Glorious woman ! But once only treated as a slave, she thought life no longer to be endured. Lucretia, a woman, disdained a life that depended on a tyrant's will ; and shall we, shall men with such an example before our eyes, and after five-and-twenty years of ignominious servitude, shall we, through a fear of dying, defer one single instant to assert our liberty ? No, Romans, now is the time ;
the

the favourable moment we have so long waited for is come. Tarquin is not at Rome. The Patricians are at the head of the enterprize. The city is abundantly provided with men, and arms, and all things necessary. There is nothing wanting to secure the success, if our own courage does not fail us. And shall those warriors, who have ever been so brave when foreign enemies were to be subdued, or when conquests were to be made to gratify the ambition and avarice of Tarquin, be then only cowards, when they are to deliver themselves from slavery? Some of you are perhaps intimidated by the army which Tarquin now commands. The soldiers, you imagine, will take the part of their general. Banish so groundless a fear. The love of liberty is natural to all men. Your fellow citizens in the camp feel the weight of oppression with as quick a sense as you that are in Rome: they will as eagerly seize the occasion of throwing off the yoke. But let us grant there may be some among them, who, through baseness of spirit or a bad education, will be disposed to favour the tyrant: The number of these can be but small, and we have means sufficient in our hands to reduce them to reason. They have left us hostages more dear to them than life. Their lives, their children, their fathers, their mothers, are here in the city. Courage, Romans, the Gods are for us; those Gods, whose Temples and altars the impious Tarquin has profaned by sacrifices and libations made with polluted hands, polluted with blood, and with numberless unexpiated crimes committed against his subjects. Ye Gods, who protected our forefathers, ye Genii, who watch for the preservation and glory of Rome, do you inspire us with courage and unanimity in this glorious cause, and we will to our last breath defend your worship from all profanation.

HANNIBAL TO HIS SOLDIERS.

I KNOW not, soldiers, whether you or your prisoners be encompassed by fortune with the stricter bonds and necessities. Two seas inclose you on the right and left;—not a ship to fly to for escaping. Before you is the Po, a river broader and more rapid than the Rhone, behind you are the Alps, over which, even when your numbers were undiminished, you were hardly able to force a passage. Here then, soldiers, you must either conquer or die, the very first hour you meet the enemy. But the same fortune which has thus laid you under the necessity of fighting, has set before your eyes those rewards of victory, than which no men are ever wont to wish for greater from the immortal Gods. Should we by our valour recover only Sicily and Sardinia, which were ravished from our fathers, those would be no inconsiderable prizes. Yet, what are these? The wealth of Rome, whatever riches she has heaped together in the spoils of nations, all these, with the masters of them, will be yours. You have been long enough employed in driving the cattle upon the vast mountains of Lusitania and Celtiberia; you have hitherto met with no reward worthy of the labours and dangers you have undergone. The time is now come to reap the full recompense of your toilsome marches over so many mountains and rivers, and through so many nations, all of them in arms. This is the place which fortune has appointed to be the limits of your labours; it is here that you will finish your glorious warfare, and receive an ample recompense of your compleated service. For I would not have you imagine, that victory will be as difficult as the name of a Roman war is great and sounding. It has often happened that a despised enemy has given a bloody battle, and the most renowned kings and nations have by a small force been overthrown. And if you but take away the glitter of the Roman name, what is there, wherein they may stand in competition with you? For (to say nothing of your service in war for twenty years together with so much valour and success) from the very pillars of Hercules, from the ocean, from the utmost bounds of the earth, through so many warlike nations of Spain and Gaul, are you not come hither victorious? And with whom are you now to fight? With raw soldiers, an undisciplined army, beaten, vanquished, besieged by the Gauls the very last summer, an army unknown to their leader, and unacquainted with him.

G

OR shall I, who was born, I might almost say, but certainly brought up, in the tent of my father, that most excellent general, shall I, the conqueror of Spain and Gaul, and not only of the Alpine nations, but, which is greater yet, of the Alps themselves, shall I compare myself with this half-year captain? A captain before whom should one place the two armies without their ensigns, I am persuaded he would not know to which of them he is consul? I esteem it no small advantage, soldiers, that there is not one among you, who has not often been an eye-witness of my exploits in war; not one of whose valour I myself have not been a spectator, so as to be able to name the times and places of his noble achievements; that with soldiers, whom I have a thousand times praised and rewarded, and whose pupil I was, before I became their general, I shall march against an army of men, strangers to one another.

ON what side soever I turn my eyes, I behold all full of courage and strength; a veteran infantry, a most gallant cavalry; you, my allies, most faithful and valiant; you, Carthaginians, whom not only your country's cause, but the justest anger impels to battle. The hope, the courage of assailants, is always greater than of those who act upon the defensive. With hostile banners displayed, you are come down upon Italy; you bring the war. Grief, injuries, injuries, indignities fire your minds, and spur you forward to revenge. — First they demanded me; that I, your general, should be delivered up to them; next, all of you, who had fought at the siege of Saguntum; and we were to be put to death by the extremest tortures. Proud and cruel nation! Every thing must be yours, and at your disposal! You are to prescribe to us with whom we shall make war, with whom we shall make peace! You are to set us bounds; to shut us up within hills and rivers; but you, you are not to observe the limits which yourselves have fixed! Pass not the Iberus. What next? Touch not the Saguntines; Saguntum is upon the Iberus, move not a step towards that city. Is it a small matter then, that you have deprived us of our ancient possessions, Sicily and Sardinia; you would have Spain too? Well, we shall yield Spain; and then—you will pass into Africa. Will pass, did I say? — This very year they ordered one of their consuls into Africa, the other into Spain. No, soldiers, there is nothing left for us but what we can vindicate with our swords. Come on then. Be men. The Romans may with more safety be cowards; they have their own country behind them, have places of refuge to fly to, and are secure from danger in the roads thither; but for you there is no middle fortune between death and victory. Let this be but well fixed in your mind, and once again, I say, you are conquerors.

C H A P. III.

C. MARIUS TO THE ROMANS, ON THEIR HESITATING TO APPOINT HIM GENERAL IN THE EXPEDITION AGAINST JUGURTHA, MERELY ON ACCOUNT OF HIS EXTRACTION.

IT is but too common, my countrymen, to observe a material difference between the behaviour of those, who stand candidates for places of power and trust, before, and after their obtaining them. They solicit them in one manner, and execute them in another. They set out with a great appearance of activity, humility, and moderation; and they quickly fall into sloth, pride, and avarice. It is undoubtedly, no easy matter to discharge, to the general satisfaction, the duty of a supreme commander in troublesome times. I am, I hope, duly sensible of the importance of the office I propose to take upon me, for the service of my country. To carry on, with effect, an expensive war, and yet be frugal of the public money; to oblige those to serve, whom it may be delicate to offend; to conduct, at the same time, a complicated variety of operations; to concert measures at home answerable to the state of things abroad; and to gain every valuable end, in spite of opposition from the envious, the factious, and the disaffected; to do all this, my countrymen, is more difficult, than is generally thought. And, besides the disadvantages, which are common to me with all others in eminent stations, my case is in this respect, peculiarly hard; that, whereas a commander of patrician rank, if he is guilty of a neglect, or breach of duty, has his great connections, the antiquity of his family, the important services of his ancestors, and the multitudes he has by power engaged in his interest, to screen him from condign punishment: my whole safety depends upon myself; which renders it the more indispensably necessary for

for me to take care, that my conduct be clear and unexceptionable. Besides, I am well aware, my countrymen, that the eye of the public is upon me; and that, though the impartial, who prefer the real advantage of the common wealth to all other considerations, favour my pretensions, the patricians want nothing so much, as an occasion against me. It is, therefore, my fixed resolution, to use my best endeavours, that you be not disappointed in me, and that their indirect designs against me may be defeated. I have, from my youth, been familiar with toils, and with dangers. I was faithful to your interest, my countrymen, when I served you for no reward, but that of honour. It is not my design to betray you, now that you have conferred upon me a place of profit. You have committed to my conduct the war against Jugurtha. The Patricians are offended at this. But where would be the wisdom of giving such a command to one of their honourable body, a person of illustrious birth, of antient family, of innumerable statues, but—of no experience? What service would his long line of dead ancestors, or his multitude of motionless statues, do his country in the day of battle? What could such a general do, but, in his trepidation and inexperience, have recourse to some inferior commander, for direction in difficulties, to which he was not himself equal? Thus, your Patrician general would, in fact, have a general over him; so that, the acting commander would still be a Plebeian. So true is this, my countrymen, that I have myself known those, who have been chosen consuls, begin then to read the history of their own country, of which till that time, they were totally ignorant; that is, they first obtained the employment, and then bethought themselves of the qualifications necessary for the proper discharge of it. I submit to your judgment, Romans, on which side the advantage lies, when the comparison is made between Patrician haughtiness, and Plebeian experience. The very actions, which they have only read, I have partly seen, and partly myself atchieved.

What they know by reading, I know by action. They are pleased to slight my mean birth: I despise their mean characters. Want of birth and fortune is the objection against me: want of personal worth against them. But are not all men of the same species? What can make a difference between one man and another, but the endowments of the mind? For my part, I shall always look upon the bravest man as the noblest man. Suppose it were enquired of the fathers of such Patricians as Albinus and Bestia, whether, if they had their choice, they would desire sons of their character, or of mine; what would they answer, but that they would wish the worthiest to be their sons? If the Patricians have reason to despise me, let them likewise despise their ancestors, whose nobility was the fruit of their virtue. Do they envy the honours bestowed upon me? Let them envy likewise my labours, my abstinence, and the dangers I have undergone for my country; by which I have acquired them. But those worthless men lead such a life of inactivity, as if they despised any honours you can bestow; whilst they aspire to honours, as if they had deserved them by the most industrious virtue. They arrogate the rewards of activity for their having enjoyed the pleasures of luxury. Yet none can be more lavish than they are, in praise of their ancestors. And they imagine they honour themselves by celebrating their forefathers. Whereas they do the very contrary. For, as much as their ancestors were distinguished for their virtues, so much are they disgraced by their vices. The glory of ancestors casts a light, indeed, upon their posterity; but it only serves to shew what the descendants are. It alike exhibits to public view their degeneracy, and their worth. I own, I cannot boast of the deeds of my forefathers; but I hope I may answer the cavils of the Patricians by standing up in defence of what I have myself done. Observe, now, my countrymen, the injustice of the Patricians. They arrogate to themselves honours on account of the exploits done by their forefathers, whilst they will

will not allow me the due praise for performing the very same sort of actions in my own person. He has no statues, they cry, of his family. He can trace no venerable line of ancestors.—What then? Is it matter of more praise to disgrace ones illustrious ancestors, than to become illustrious by one's own good behaviour? What if I can shew no statues of my family? I can shew the standards, the armour, and the trappings, which I myself have taken from the vanquished: I can shew the scars of those wounds, which I have received by facing the enemies of my country. These are my statues. These are the honours I boast of; not left me by inheritance, as theirs; but earned by toil, by abstinence, by valour, amidst clouds of dust, and seas of blood; scenes of action, where those effeminate Patricians, who endeavour, by indirect means, to depreciate me in your esteem, have never dared to shew their faces.

CALISTHENES'S REPROOF OF CLEON'S
FLATTERY TO ALEXANDER.

IF the king were present, Cleon, there would be no need of my answering to what you have just proposed. He would himself reprove you for endeavouring to draw him into an imitation of foreign absurdities, and for bringing envy upon him by such unmanly flattery. As he is absent, I take upon me to tell you in his name, that no praise is lasting, but what is rational; and that you do what you can to lessen his glory, instead of adding to it. Heroes have never among us been deified till after their death. And, whatever may be your way of thinking, Cleon, for my part, I wish the king may not, for many years to come, obtain that honour. You have mentioned, as precedents of what you propose, Hercules, and Bacchus. Do you imagine, Cleon, that they were deified over a cup of wine? And are you and I qualified to make gods? Is the king, our sovereign, to receive his divinity from you and me, who are his subjects? First try your power, whether you can make a king. It is, surely, easier to make a king, than a god; to give an earthly dominion, than a throne in heaven. I only wish, that the gods may have heard, without offence, the arrogant proposal you have made, of adding one to their number; and that they may still be so propitious to us, as to grant the continuance of that success to our affairs, with which they have hitherto favoured us. For my part, I am not ashamed of my country; nor do I approve of our adopting the rites of foreign nations, or learning from them how we ought to reverence our kings. To receive laws, or rules of conduct, from them, what is it, but to confess ourselves inferior to them?

THE SCYTHIAN AMBASSADORS TO ALEXANDER.

IF your person were as gigantic as your desires, the world would not contain you. Your right hand would touch the east, and your left the west, at the same time. You grasp at more than you are equal to. From Europe you reach Asia: from Asia you lay hold on Europe. And if you should conquer all mankind, you seem disposed to wage war with woods and snows, with rivers and wild beasts, and to attempt to subdue nature. But have you considered the usual course of things? Have you reflected, that great trees are many years in growing to their height, and are cut down in an hour? It is foolish to think of the fruit only, without considering the height you have to climb, to come at it. Take care lest, while you strive to reach the top, you fall to the ground with with the branches, you have laid hold on. The lion when dead is devoured by ravens; and rust consumes the hardness of iron. There is nothing so strong, but it is in danger from what is weak. It will, therefore, be your wisdom, to take care how you venture beyond your reach. Besides, what have you to do with the Scythians, or the Scythians with you? We have never invaded Macedon: why should you attack Seythia? We inhabit vast deserts, and pathless woods, where we do not want to hear of the name of Alexander. We are not disposed to submit to slavery; and we have no ambition to tyrannize over any nation. That you may understand the genius of the Scythians, we present you with a yoke of oxen, an arrow, and a goblet. We use these respectively in our commerce with friends, and with foes. We give to our friends the corn, which we raise by the labour of our oxen. With the goblet we join with them in pouring drink-offerings to the gods: and with arrows we attack our enemies. We have conquered those, who have attempted to tyrannize over us in our own country, and likewise the kings of the Medes and Persians, when they made unjust war upon us; and we have opened to ourselves a way into Egypt. You pretend to be the punisher of robbers; and are yourself the general robber of mankind. You have taken Lydia: you have seized Syria: you are master of Persia: you have subdued the Bactrians; and attacked India. All this will not satisfy you, unless you lay your greedy and insatiable hands upon our flocks and our herds. How imprudent is your conduct! You grasp at riches, the possession of which only encreases your avarice. You increase your hunger by what should produce satiety; so that the more you have the more you desire. But have you forgot how long the conquest of the Bactrians detained you? While you were subduing them, the Sogdians revolted. Your victories serve no other purpose, than to find you employment by producing new wars. For the business of every conquest is twofold; to win, and to preserve. And though you may be the greatest of warriors, you must expect, that the nations you conquer will endeavour to shake off the yoke as fast as possible. For what people chooses to be under foreign dominion? If you will cross the Tanais, you may travel over Scythia, and observe how extensive a territory we inhabit. But to conquer us is quite another business. Your army is loaded with cumbrous spoils of many nations. You will find the poverty of the Scythians, at one time, too nimble for your pursuit; and, at another time, when you think we are fled far enough from you, you will have us surprize you in your camp. For the Scythians attack with no less vigour than they fly. Why should we put you in mind of the vastness of the country you will have to conquer! The deserts of Scythia are commonly talked of in Greece; and all the world knows, that our delight is to dwell at large, and not in towns, or plantations. It will therefore be your wisdom to keep, with strict attention, what you have gained. Catching at more, you may lose what you have. We have a proverbial saying in Scythia, That Fortune has no feet, and is furnished only with hands, to distribute her capricious favours, and with fins to elude the grasp of those, to whom she has been bountiful. You give yourself out to be a god, the son of Jupiter Ammon. It suits the character of a god, to bestow favours on mortals; not to deprive them of what they have. But if you are no god: reflect on the precarious condition of humanity. You will thus shew more wisdom, than by dwelling on those subjects, which have puffed up your pride, and made you forget yourself. You see how little you are likely to gain by attempting the conquest of Scythia. On the other hand, you may, if you please, have in us a valuable alliance. We command the borders of both Europe and Asia. There is nothing between us and Bactria, but the river Tanais; and our territory extends to Thrace, which, as we have heard, borders on Macedon. If you decline attacking us in a hostile manner you may have our friendship. Nations, which have never been at war, are on an equal footing. But it is in vain, that confidence is reposed in a conquered people. There can be no sincere friendship between the oppressors and the oppressed. Even in peace, the latter think themselves entitled to the rights of war against the former. We will, if you think good, enter into a treaty with you, according to our manner, which is, not by signing, sealing, and taking the gods to witness, as is the Grecian custom; but by doing actual services. The Scythians are not used to promise; but to perform without promising. And they think an appeal to the gods superfluous; for that those, who have no regard for the esteem of men, will not hesitate to offend the gods, by perjury. You may therefore consider with yourself, whether you had better have a people of such a character, and so situated as to have it in their power either to serve you, or to annoy you, according as you treat them; for allies, or for enemies.

QUINTUS CURTIUS.

C H A P. VI.

GALGACUS, the GENERAL OF THE CALEDONII, TO HIS ARMY, TO INCITE THEM TO ACTION AGAINST THE ROMANS.

COUNTRYMEN, and FELLOW-SOLDIERS!

WHEN I consider the cause, for which we have drawn our swords, and the necessity of striking an effectual blow, before we sheath them again, I feel joyful hopes arising in my mind, that this day an opening will be made for the restoration of British liberty, and for shaking off the infamous yoke of Roman slavery. Caledonia is yet free. The all-grasping power of Rome has not yet been able to seize our liberty. But it is only to be preserved by valour.

valour. You are not to expect, that you should escape the ravage of the general plunderers of mankind, by any sentiment of moderation in them. When the countries, which are more accessible, come to be subdued, they will then force their way into those, which are harder to be overcome. And if they should conquer the dry land, over the whole world, they will then think of carrying their arms beyond the ocean, to see whether there be not certain unknown regions, which they may attack, and reduce under subjection to the Roman Empire. For we see, that if a country is thought to be powerful in arms, the Romans attack it, because the conquest will be glorious; if inconsiderable in the military art, because the victory will be easy; if rich, they are drawn thither by the hope of plunder; if poor, by the desire of fame. The east and the west, the south and the north, the face of the whole earth, is the scene of their military achievements; the world is too little for their ambition, and their avarice. They are the only nation ever known to be equally desirous of conquering a poor kingdom as a rich one. Their supreme joy seems to be ravaging, fighting, and shedding of blood; and when they have unpeopled a region, so that there are none left alive to bear arms, they say, they have given peace to that country.

NATURE itself has peculiarly endeared, to all men, their wives, and their children. But it is known to you, my countrymen, that the conquered youth are daily draughted off to supply the deficiencies in the Roman army. The wives, the sisters, and the daughters of the conquered are either exposed to the violence, or at least corrupted by the arts, of these cruel spoilers. The fruits of our industry are plundered, to make up the tributes imposed on us by oppressive avarice. Britons sow their fields; and the greedy Romans reap them. Our very bodies are worn out in carrying on their military works; and our toils are rewarded by them with abuse and stripes. Those, who are born to slavery, are bought and maintained by their master. But this unhappy country try pays for being enslaved, and feeds those who enslave it. And our portion of disgrace is the bitterest, as the inhabitants of this island are the last who have fallen under the galling yoke. Our native bent against tyranny, is the offence which most sensibly irritates those lordly usurpers. Our distance from the seat of government, and our natural defence by the surrounding ocean, renders us obnoxious to their suspicions: for they know, that Britons are born with an instinctive love of liberty; and they conclude, that we must be naturally led to think of taking the advantage of our detached situation, to disengage ourselves, one time or other, from their oppression.

THUS, my countrymen, and fellow-soldiers, suspected and hated, as we ever must be by the Romans, there is no prospect of our enjoying even a tolerable state of bondage under them. Let us then, in the name of all that is sacred, and in defence of all that is dear to us, resolve to exert ourselves, if not for glory, at least for safety; if not in vindication of British honour, at least in defence of our lives. How near were the Brigantines to shake off the yoke—led on too by a woman! They burnt a Roman settlement: they attacked the dreaded Roman legions in their camp. Had not their partial success drawn them into a fatal security, the business had been completed. And shall not we, of the Caledonian region, whose territories are yet free, and whose strength is entire, shall we not, my fellow-soldiers, attempt somewhat, which may shew these foreign ravagers, that they have more to do, than they think of, before they be masters of the whole island?

BUT, after all, who are these mighty Romans? Are they gods; or mortal men, like ourselves? Do we not see, that they fall into the same errors, and weaknesses, as others? Does not peace effeminate them? Does not abundance debauch them? Does not wantonness enervate them? Do they not even go to excess in the most unmanly vices? And can you imagine, that they, who are remarkable for their vices, ces, are likewise remarkable for their valour ? What, then, do we dread ?—Shall I tell you the truth, my fellow-soldiers ? It is by means of our intestine divisions, that the Romans have gained such great advantage over us. They turn the misconduct of their enemies to their own praise. They boast of what they have done, and say nothing of what they might have done, had we been so wise, as to unite against them.

WHAT is this formidable Roman army ? Is it not composed of a mixture of people from different countries ; some more, some less, disposed to military achievements ; some more, some less, capable of bearing fatigue and hardship. They keep together, while they are successful. Attack them with vigour : distress them : you will see them more disunited among themselves, than we are now. Can any one imagine, that Gauls, Germans, and,—with shame I must add, Britons, who basely lend, for a time, their limbs, and their lives, to build up a foreign tyranny ; can one imagine, that these will be longer enemies, than slaves ? or that such an army is held together by sentiments of fidelity, or affection ? No : the only bond of union among them is fear. And, whenever terror ceases to work upon the minds of that mixed multitude, they who now fear, will then hate, their tyrannical masters. On our side there is every possible incitement to valour. The Roman courage is not, as ours, inflamed by the thoughts of wives and children in danger of falling into the hands of the enemy. The Romans have not parents, as we have, to reproach them, if they should desert their infirm old age. They have no country here to fight for. They are a motley collection of foreigners, in a land wholly unknown to them, cut off from their native country, hemmed in by the surrounding ocean, and given, I hope, a prey into our hands, without all possibility of escape. Let not the sound of the Roman name affright your ears. Nor let the glare of gold or silver, upon their armour, dazzle your eyes. It is not by gold or silver, that men are either wounded, or defended; though they are rendered a richer prey to the conquerors. Let us boldly attack this disunited rabble. We shall find among themselves a reinforcement to our army. The degenerate Britons, who are incorporated into their forces, will through shame of their country's cause deserted by them, quickly leave the Romans, and come over to us. The Gauls, remembering their former liberty, and that it was the Romans who deprived them of it, will forsake their tyrants, and join the assertors of freedom. The Germans who remain in their army, will follow the example of their countrymen, the Usipii, who so lately deserted. And what will there be then, to fear? A few half-garrisoned forts; a few municipal towns, inhabited by worn-out old men; discord universally prevailing, occasioned by tyranny in those who command, and obstinacy in those who should obey. On our side, an army united in the cause of their country, their wives, their children, their aged parents, their liberties, their lives. At the head of this army, I hope I do not offend against modesty in saying there is a General ready to exert all his abilities, such as they are, and to hazard his life in leading you to victory, and to freedom.

I CONCLUDE, my countrymen, and fellow-soldiers, with putting you in mind, that on your behaviour this day depends your future enjoyment of peace and liberty, or your subjection to a tyrannical enemy, with all its grievous consequences. When therefore, you come to engage—think of your ancestors—and think of your posterity.

TACITUS.

C H A P. VII.

THE EARL OF ARUNDEL'S SPEECH, PROPOSING AN ACCOMMODATION BETWEEN
HENRY II. AND STEPHEN.

IN the midst of a wide and open plain, Henry found Stephen encamped, and pitched his own tents within a quarter of a mile of him, preparing for a battle with all the eagerness, that the desire of empire and glory could excite, in a brave and youthful heart, elate with success. Stephen also much wished to bring the contest between them to a speedy decision: but, while he and Eustace were consulting with William of Ipres, in whose affection they most confided, and by whose private advice they took all their measures, the earl of Arundel, having assembled the English nobility, and principal officers, spoke to this effect.

IT is now above sixteen years, that on a doubtful and disputed claim to the crown, the rage of civil war has almost continually infested this kingdom. During this melancholy period how much blood has been shed! What devastations and misery have been brought on the people! The laws have lost their force, the crown its authority: licentiousness and impunity have shaken all the foundations of public security. This great and noble nation has been delivered a prey to the basest of foreigners, the abominable scum of Flanders, Brabant, and Bretagne, robbers, rather than soldiers, restrained by no laws, divine or human, tied to no country, subject to no prince, instruments of all tyranny, violence, and oppression. At the same time, our cruel neighbours, the Welsh and the Scotch, calling themselves allies or auxiliaries to the Empress, but in reality enemies and destroyers of England, have broken their bounds, ravaged our borders, and taken from us whole provinces, which we can never hope to recover, while, instead

instead of employing our united force against them, we continue thus madly, without any care of our public safety or national honour, to turn our swords against our own bosoms. What benefits have we gained to compensate all these losses, or what do we expect? When Matilda was mistress of the kingdom, though her power was not yet confirmed, in what manner did she govern? Did she not make even those of her own faction, and court, regret the king? Was not her pride more intolerable still than his levity, her rapine than his profuseness? Were any years of his reign so grievous to the people, so offensive to the nobles, as the first days of hers? When she was driven out, did Stephen correct his former bad conduct? Did he dismiss his odious foreign favourite? Did he discharge his lawless foreign hirelings, who had so long been the scourge and the reproach of England? Have they not lived ever since upon free quarter, by plundering our houses and burning our cities? And now to compleat our miseries, a new army of foreigners, Angevins, Gascons, Poitevins, I know not who, are come over with Henry Plantagenet, the son of Matilda; and many more, no doubt, will be called to assist him, as soon as ever his affairs abroad will permit; by whose help, if he be victorious, England must pay the price of their services: our lands, our honours, must be the hire of these rapacious invaders. But suppose we should have the fortune to conquer for Stephen, what will be the consequence? Will victory teach him moderation? Will he learn from security that regard to our liberties, which he could not learn from danger? Alas! the only fruit of our good success, will be this; the estates of the earl of Leicester and others of our countrymen, who have now quitted the party of the king, will be forfeited; and new confiscations will accrue to William of Ipres.

BUT let us not hope, that, be our victory ever so complete, it will give any lasting peace to this kingdom. Should Henry fall in this battle, there are two other brothers, to succeed to his claim, and support his faction, perhaps with less merit, but certainly with as much ambition as he. What shall we do then to free ourselves from all these misfortunes? — Let us prefer the interest of our country to that of our party, and to all those passions, which are apt, in civil dissensions, to inflame zeal into madness, and render men the blind instruments of those very evils, which they fight to avoid. Let us prevent all the crimes and all the horrors that attend a war of this kind, in which conquest itself is full of calamity, and our most happy victories deserve to be celebrated only by tears. Nature herself is dismayed, and shrinks back from a combat, where every blow that we strike may murder a friend, a relation, a parent. Let us hearken to her voice, which commands us to refrain from that guilt. Is there one of us here, who would not think it a happy and glorious act, to save the life of one of his country-men? What a felicity then, and what a glory, must it be to us all, if we save the lives of thousands of Englishmen, that must otherwise fall in this battle, and in many other battles, which hereafter, may be fought in this quarrel? It is in our power to do so — It is in our power to end the controversy, both safely and honourably; by an amicable agreement; not by the sword. Stephen may enjoy the royal dignity for his life, and the succession may be secured to the young duke of Normandy with such a present rank in the state, as befits the heir of the crown. Even the bitterest enemies, of the king must acknowledge, that he is valiant, generous, and good-natured: his warmest friends cannot deny, that he has a great deal of rashness and indiscretion. Both may therefore conclude, that he should not be deprived of the royal authority, but that he ought to be restrained from a further abuse of it; which can be done by no means, so certain and effectual, as what I propose: for thus his power will be tempered, by the presence, the counsels, and influence of Prince Henry; who from his own interest in the weal of the kingdom, which he is to inherit, inherit, will always have a right to interpose his advice, and even his authority, if it be necessary, against any future violation of our liberties ; and to procure an effectual redress of our grievances, which we have hitherto sought in vain. If all the English in both armies unite, as I hope that they may, in this plan of pacification, they will be able to give the law to the foreigners, and oblige both the king and the duke to consent to it. This will secure the public tranquillity, and leave no secret stings of resentment, to rankle in the hearts of a suffering party, and produce future disturbances. As there will be no triumph, no insolence, no exclusive right to favour on either side, there can be no shame, no anger, no uneasy desire of change. It will be the work of the whole nation; and all must wish to support what all have established. The sons of Stephen indeed may endeavour to oppose it: but their efforts will be fruitless, and must end very soon, either in their submission or their ruin. Nor have they any reasonable cause to complain. Their father himself did not come to the crown by hereditary right. He was elected in preference to a woman and an infant, who were deemed not to be capable of ruling a kingdom. By that election our allegiance is bound to him during his life : but neither that bond, nor the reason for which we chose him, will hold, as to the choice of a successor. Henry Plantagenet is now grown up to an age of maturity, and every way qualified to succeed to the crown. He is the grandson of a king whose memory is dear to us, and the nearest heir male to him in the course of descent : he appears to resemble him in all his good qualities, and to be worthy to reign over the Normans and English, whose noblest blood, united, enriches his veins. Normandy has already submitted to him with pleasure. Why should we now divide that duchy from England, when it is so greatly the interest of our nobility to keep them always connected ? If we had no other inducement to make us desire a reconciliation between him and Stephen, this would be sufficient.

Our

Our estates in both countries, will, by that means, be secured, which otherwise we must forfeit, in the one, or the other, while Henry remains possessed of Normandy : and it will not be an easy matter to drive them from thence, even though we should compel him to retire from England. But by amicably compounding his quarrel with Stephen, we shall maintain all our interests, private and public. His greatness abroad will increase the power of this kingdom : it will make us respectable and formidable to France : England will be the head of all those ample dominions, which extend from the British ocean to the Pyrenean mountains. By governing, in his youth so many different states, he will learn to govern us, and come to the crown, after the decease of king Stephen, accompanied in all the arts of good policy. His mother has willingly resigned to him her pretensions, or rather she acknowledges that his are superior : we therefore can have nothing to apprehend on that side. In every view, our peace, our safety, the repose of our consciences, the quiet and happiness of our posterity will be firmly established by the means I propose. Let Stephen continue to wear the crown that we give him, as long as he lives ; but after his death let it descend to that prince, who alone can put an end to our unhappy divisions. If you approve my advice, and will empower me to treat in your names, I will immediately convey your desires to the king and the duke.

LORD LYTTLETON.

C H A P. VIII.

MR. PULTENEY'S SPEECH ON THE MOTION FOR REDUCING THE ARMY.

S I R,

WE have heard a great deal about parliamentary armies, and about an army continued from year to year ; I have always been, Sir, and always shall be against a standing army of any kind : to me
it

it is a terrible thing, whether under that of parliamentary or any other designation ; a standing army is still a standing army, whatever name it be called by ; they are a body of men distinct from the body of the people : they are governed by different laws, and blind obedience and an entire submission to the orders of their commanding officer is their only principle. The nations around us, Sir, are already enslaved, and have been enslaved by those very means ; by means of their standing armies they have every one lost their liberties ; it is indeed impossible that the liberties of the people can be preserved in any country where a numerous standing army is kept up. Shall we then taken any of our measures from the example of our neighbours ? No, Sir, on the contrary, from their misfortunes we ought to learn to avoid those rocks upon which they have split.

It signifies nothing to tell me, that our army is commanded by such gentlemen as cannot be supposed to join in any measure for enslaving their country ; it may be so ; I hope it is so ; I have a very good opinion of many gentlemen now in the army ; I believe they would not join in any such measures ; but their lives are uncertain, nor can we be sure how long they may be continued in command ; they may be all dismissed in a moment, and proper tools of power put in their room. Besides, Sir, we know the passions of men, we know how dangerous it is to trust the best of men with too much power. Where was there a braver army than that under Julius Cæsar ? Where was there ever an army that had served their country more faithfully ? That army was commanded generally by the best citizens of Rome, by men of great fortune and figure in their country ; yet that army enslaved their country. The affections of the soldiers towards their country, the honour and integrity of the under officers, are not to be depended on ; by the military law, the administration of justice is so quick, and the punishments so severe, that neither officer nor soldier dares offer to dispute the orders of his supreme commander ; he must must not consult his own inclinations : If an officer were commanded to pull his own father out of this house, he must do it ; he dares not disobey ; immediate death would be the sure consequence of the least grumbling. And if an officer were sent into the court of requests, accompanied by a body of musketeers with screwed bayonets, and with orders to tell us what we ought to do, and how we were to vote, I know what would be the duty of this house ; I know it would be our duty to order the officer to be taken and hanged up at the door of the lobby : but Sir, I doubt much if such a spirit could be found in the house, or in any house of Commons that will ever be in England.

SIR, I talk not of imaginary things ; I talk of what has happened to an English house of Commons, and from an English army ; not only from an English army, but an army that was raised by that very house of Commons, an army that was paid by them, and an army that was commanded by generals appointed by them. Therefore do not let us vainly imagine, that an army raised and maintained by authority of Parliament, will always be submissive to them : if an army be so numerous as to have it in their power to over-awe the Parliament, they will be submissive as long as the Parliament does nothing to disoblige their favourite general ; but when that case happens, I am afraid that in place of the Parliament's dismissing the army, the army will dismiss the Parliament, as they have done heretofore. Nor does the legality or illegality of that Parliament, or of that army, alter the case ; for with respect to that army, and according to their way of thinking, the Parliament dismissed by them was a legal Parliament ; they were an army raised and maintained according to law, and at first they were raised as they imagined, for the preservation of those liberties which they afterwards destroyed.

It has been urged, Sir, that whoever is for the Protestant succession must be for continuing the army : for that very reason, Sir, I am against continuing ing the army. I know that neither the Protestant succession in his Majesty's most illustrious house, nor any succession, can ever be safe as long as there is a standing army in the country. Armies, Sir, have no regard to hereditary succession. The first two Cæsars at Rome did pretty well, and found means to keep their armies in tolerable subjection, because the generals and officers were all their own creatures. But how did it fare with their successors? Was not every one of them named by the army, without any regard to hereditary right, or to any right? A cobbler, a gardener, or any man who happened to raise himself in the army, and could gain their affections, was made emperor of the world: was not every succeeding emperor raised to the throne, or tumbled headlong into the dust, according to the mere whim or mad frenzy of the soldiers?

WE are told this army is desired to be continued but for one year longer, or for a limited term of years. How absurd is this distinction? Is there any army in the world continued for any term of years? Does the most absolute monarch tell his army, that he is to continue them for any number of years, or any number of months? How long have we already continued our army from year to year? And if it thus continues, wherein will it differ from the standing armies of those countries which have already submitted their necks to the yoke? We are now come to the Rubicon; our army is now to be reduced, or it never will; from his Majesty's own mouth we are assured of a profound tranquility abroad, we know there is one at home; if this is not a proper time, if these circumstances do not afford us a safe opportunity for reducing at least a part of our regular forces, we never can expect to see any reduction; and this nation, already overloaded with debts and taxes, must be loaded with the heavy charge of perpetually supporting a numerous standing army; and remain for ever exposed to the danger of, having its liberties and privileges trampled upon by any future King or ministry, who shall take it in their heads to do do so, and shall take a proper care to model the army for that purpose.

C H A P. IX.

SIR JOHN ST. AUBIN'S SPEECH FOR REPEAL-
ING THE SEPTENNIAL ACT.

MR. SPEAKER,

THE subject matter of this debate is of such importance, that I should be ashamed to return to my electors, without endeavouring, in the best manner I am able, to declare publicly the reasons which induced me to give my most ready assent to this question.

THE people have an unquestionable right to frequent new Parliaments by ancient usage ; and this usage has been confirmed by several laws, which have been progressively made by our ancestors, as often as they found it necessary to insist on this essential privilege.

PARLIAMENTS were generally annual, but never continued longer than three years, till the remarkable reign of Henry VIII. He, Sir, was a Prince of unruly appetites, and of an arbitrary will : he was impatient of every restraint ; the laws of God and man fell equally a sacrifice, as they stood in the way of his avarice, or disappointed his ambition ; he therefore introduced long Parliaments, because he very well knew, that they would become the proper instruments of both ; and what a slavish obedience they paid to all his measures is sufficiently known.

IF we come to the reign of King Charles the First, we must acknowledge him to be a prince of a contrary temper ; he had certainly an innate love for religion and virtue. But here lay the misfortune—he was led from his natural disposition by sycophants and flatterers ; they advised him to neglect the calling of frequent new Parliaments, and therefore, by not taking the constant sense of his people in what what he did, he was worked up into so high a notion of prerogative, that the Commons (in order to restrain it) obtained that independant fatal power, which at last unhappily brought him to his most tragical end, and at the same time subverted the whole constitution. And I hope we shall learn this lesson from it, never to compliment the crown, with any new or extravagant powers, nor to deny the people those rights, which by ancient usage they are entitled to; but to preserve the just and equal balance, from which they will both derive mutual security, and which, if duly observed, will render our constitution the envy and admiration of all the world.

KING CHARLES the Second naturally took a surfeit of Parliaments in his father's time, and was therefore extremely desirous to lay them aside. But this was a scheme impracticable. However, in effect, he did so: for he obtained a Parliament, which, by its long duration, like an army of veterans, became so exactly disciplined to his own measures, that they knew no other command but from that person who gave them their pay.

THIS was a safe and most ingenious way of enslaving a nation. It was very well known, that arbitrary power, if it was open and avowed, would never prevail here. The people were therefore amused with the specious form of their ancient constitution; it existed, indeed, in their fancy; but like a mere phantom, had no substance nor reality in it, for the power, the authority, the dignity of Parliaments were wholly lost. This was that remarkable Parliament which so justly obtained the opprobrious name of PENSION PARLIAMENT; and was the model from which I believe, some later Parliaments have been exactly copied.

AT the time of the revolution, the people made a fresh claim of their ancient privileges; and as they had so lately experienced the misfortune of long and servile Parliaments, it was then declared, that they should be held frequently. But, it seems, their full meaning was not understood by this declaration; and therefore, as in every new settlement the intention of all parties should be specifically manifested, the Parliament never ceased struggling with the crown, till the triennial law was obtained : the preamble of it is extremely full and strong ; and in the body of the bill you will find the word declared before enacted, by which I apprehend, that though this law did not immediately take place at the time of the revolution, it was certainly intended as declaratory of their first meaning, and therefore stands a part of that original contract under which the constitution was then settled. His majesty's title to the crown, is primarily derived from that contract ; and if, upon a review, there shall appear to be any deviations from it, we ought to treat them as so many injuries done to that title. And I dare say, that this house, which has gone through so long a series of services to his Majesty, will at last be willing to revert to those original stated measures of government, to renew and strengthen that title.

BUT, Sir, I think the manner in which the septennial law was first introduced, is a very strong reason why it should be repealed. People, in their fears, have very often recourse to desperate expedients, which, if not cancelled in season, will themselves, prove fatal to that constitution, which they were meant to secure. Such is the nature of the septennial law ; it was intended only as a preservative against a temporary inconvenience : the inconvenience is removed, but the mischievous effects still continue ; for it not only altered the constitution of Parliaments, but it extended the same Parliament beyond its natural duration ; and therefore carries the most unjust implication with it, That you may at any time usurp the most indubitable, the most essential privilege of the people—I mean that of chusing their own representatives. A precedent of such a dangerous consequence, of so fatal a tendency, that I think it would be a reproach to our statute-book, if that law was any longer to subsist, which might record it to posterity.

THIS is a season of virtue and public spirit. Let us take advantage of it to repeal those laws which infringe our liberties, and introduce such as may restore the vigour of our ancient constitution.

HUMAN nature is so very corrupt, that all obligations lose their force, unless they are frequently renewed.——Long Parliaments become therefore independent of the people, and when they do so, there always happens a most dangerous dependence elsewhere.

LONG Parliaments give the ministers an opportunity of getting acquaintance with members, of practising his several arts to win them into his schemes.——This must be the work of time——Corruption is of so base a nature, that at first sight it is extremely shocking——Hardly any one has submitted to it all at once.——His disposition must be previously understood, the particular bait must be found out with which he is to be allured, and after all, it is not without many struggles that he surrenders his virtue.——Indeed, there are some, who will at once plunge themselves, into any base action, but the generality of mankind are of a more cautious nature, and will proceed only by leisurely degrees.——One or two perhaps have deserted their colours the first campaign, some have done it a second.——But a great many, who have not that eager disposition to vice, will wait till a third.

FOR this reason, short parliaments have been less corrupt than long ones; they are observed, like streams of water, always to grow more impure the greater distance they run from the fountain-head.

I AM aware, it may be said, that frequent new Parliaments will produce frequent new expences, but I think quite the contrary; I am really of opinion, that it will be a proper remedy against the evil of liberty at elections, especially as you have provided so wholesome a law to co operate upon these occasions.

His Grace the Duke of BRISBURY

BRIBERY at elections, whence did it arise? Not from country gentlemen, for they are sure of being chosen without it; it was, Sir, the invention of wicked and corrupt ministers, who have from time to time, led weak Princes into such destructive measures, that they did not dare to rely upon the natural representation of the people.——Long Parliaments, Sir, first introduced Bribery, because they were worth purchasing at any rate :——Country gentlemen, who have only their private fortunes to rely upon, and have no mercenary ends to serve, are unable to oppose it, especially if at any time the public treasure shall be unfaithfully squandered away, to corrupt their boroughs.——Country gentlemen, indeed, may make some weak efforts; but as they generally prove unsuccessful, and the time of a fresh struggle is at so great a distance, they at last grow faint in the dispute, give up their country for lost, and retire in despair.——Despair naturally produces indolence, and that is the proper disposition for slavery. Ministers of state understand this very well, and are therefore unwilling to awaken the nation out of its lethargy, by frequent elections.——They know that the spirit of liberty, like every other virtue of the mind, is to be kept alive only by constant action; that it is impossible to enslave this nation, while it is perpetually upon its guard.——Let country gentlemen then, by having frequent opportunities of exerting themselves, be kept warm and active in their contention for the public good: this will raise that zeal and spirit, which will at last get the better of those undue influences, by which the officers of the crown, though unknown to the several boroughs, have been able to supplant country gentlemen of great characters and fortune, who live in their neighbourhood.——I do not say this upon idle speculation only.——I live in a country where it is too well known, and I appeal to many gentlemen in the house, to more out of it (and who are so for this very reason) for the truth of my assertion. Sir, it is a sore which has been long eating into the most vital part of the constitution, and I hope the time will come when you will probe it to the bottom — For if a minister should ever gain a corrupt familiarity with our boroughs, if he should keep a register of them in his closet, and, by sending down his treasury-mandates should procure a spurious representative of the people, the off-spring of his corruption, who will be at all times ready to reconcile and justify the most contradictory measures of his administration, and even to vote every crude indigested dream of their patron into a law; if the maintenance of his power should become the sole object of their attention, and that they should be guilty of the most violent breach of Parliamentary trust, by giving the King a discretionary liberty of taxing the people without limitation or controul; the last fatal compliment they can pay to the crown; — if this should ever be the unhappy condition of this nation, the people indeed may complain; but the doors of that place where their complaints should be heard, will for ever be shut against them.

OUR disease, I fear, is of a complicated nature, and I think that this motion is wisely intended to remove the first and principal disorder. — Give the people their ancient right of frequent new elections; they will restore the decayed authority of Parliaments, and will put our constitution into a natural condition of working out her own cure.

SIR, upon the whole, I am of opinion, that I cannot express a greater zeal for his Majesty, for the liberties of the people, or the honour and dignity of this house, than by seconding the motion which the honourable gentleman has made you.

C H A P. X.

SIR ROBERT WALPOLE'S REPLY.

MR. CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER,

THOUGH the question has been already so fully opposed, that there is no great occasion to say any thing farther against it, yet I hope, the house will indulge me the liberty of giving some of those reasons, which induce me to be against the motion. In general I must take notice, that the nature of our constitution seems to be very much mistaken by the gentlemen who have spoken in favour of this motion. It is certain, that ours is a mixt government, and the perfection of our constitution consists in this, that the monarchical, aristocratical, and democratical form of government, are mixt and interwoven in ours, so as to give us all the advantages of each, without subjecting us to the dangers and inconveniences of either. The democratical form of government, which is the only one I have now occasion to take notice of, is liable to these inconveniencies. That they are generally too tedious in their coming to any resolution, and seldom brisk and expeditious enough in carrying their resolutions into execution: that they are always wavering in their resolutions, and never steady in any of the measures they resolve to pursue; and that they are often involved in factions, seditions and insurrections, which exposes them to be made the tools, if not the prey of their neighbours: therefore in all the regulation we make, with respect to our constitution, we are to guard against running too much into that form of government which is properly called democratical: this was, in my opinion, the effect of the triennial law, and will again be the effect, if ever it should be restored.

THAT triennial elections would make our government too tedious in all their resolves, is evident; because, in such case, no prudent administration would ever resolve upon any measure of consequence, till they had felt not only the pulse of the parliament, but the pulse of the people; and the ministers of state would always labour under this disadvantage, that, as secrets of state must not be immediately divulged, their enemies, (and enemies they will always have) would have a handle for exposing their measures, and rendering them disagreeable to the people, and thereby carrying perhaps a new election against them, before they could have an opportunity of justifying their measures, by divulging those facts and circumstances, from whence the justice and the wisdom of their measures would clearly appear.

THEN, Sir, it is by experience well known, that what is called the populace of every country, are apt to be too much elated with success, and too much dejected with every misfortune; this makes them wavering in their opinions about affairs of state, and never long of the same mind; and as this house is chosen by the free and unbiassed voice of the people in general, if this choice were so often renewed, we might expect, that this house would be as wavering, and as unsteady as the people usually are; and it being impossible to carry on the public affairs of the nation, without the concurrence of this house, the ministers would always be obliged to comply, and consequently would be obliged to change their measures, as often as the people changed their minds.

WITH septennial Parliaments, Sir, we are not exposed to either of these misfortunes, because, if the ministers, after having felt the pulse of the parliament, which they can always soon do, resolve upon any measures, they have generally time enough before the new elections come on, to give the people a proper information; in order to shew them the justice and the wisdom of the measures they have pursued; and if the people should be at any time too much elated, or too much dejected, or should without a cause change their mind, those at the helm of affairs have time to set them right, before a new election comes on.

As to faction and sedition, Sir, I will grant, that in monarchical and aristocratical governments, it generally arises from violence and oppression ; but in democratical governments, it always arises from the people's having too great a share in the government ; for in all countries, and in all governments, there always will be many factious and unquiet spirits, who can never be at rest either in power or out of power : when in power, they are never easy, unless every man submits entirely to their direction, and when out of power, they are always working and intriguing against those that are in, without any regard to justice, or to the interest of their country : in popular governments such men have too much game, they have too many opportunities for working upon and corrupting the minds of the people, in order to give them a bad impression of, and to raise discontents against those that have the management of the public affairs for the time ; and these discontents often break out into seditions and insurrections. This, Sir, would in my opinion be our misfortune if our Parliaments were either annual or triennial ; by such frequent elections, there would be so much power thrown into the hands of the people as would destroy that equal mixture, which is the beauty of our constitution : in short, our government would really become a democratical government, and might from thence very probably diverge into a tyrannical. Therefore, in order to preserve our constitution, in order to prevent our falling under tyranny and arbitrary power, we ought to preserve that law, which I really think has brought our constitution to a more equal mixture, and consequently to a greater perfection than it was ever in, before the law took place.

As to bribery and corruption, Sir, if it be possible to influence, by such base means, the majority of the electors of Great Britain, to chuse such men as would

would probably give up their liberties : if it were possible to influence, by such means, a majority of the members of this house, to consent to the establishment of arbitrary power, I would readily allow, that the calculations, made by the gentlemen of the other side were just, and their inference true ; but I am persuaded, that neither of these is possible. As the members of this house generally are, and must always be gentlemen of fortune and figure in their country ; is it possible to suppose, that any of them could, by a pension, or a post, be influenced to consent to the overthrow of our constitution ; by which the enjoyment, not only of what he got, but of what he before had, would be rendered altogether precarious ? I will allow, Sir, that with respect to bribery, the price must be higher or lower, generally in proportion to the virtue of the man who is to be bribed ; but it must likewise be granted, that the humour he happens to be in at the time, the spirit he happens to be endowed with, adds a great deal to his virtue. When no encroachments are made upon the rights of the people, when the people do not think themselves in any danger, there may be many of the electors, who by a bribe of ten guineas, might be induced to vote for one candidate rather than another ; but if the court were making any encroachments upon the rights of the people, a proper spirit would without doubt, arise in the nation ; and in such a case, I am persuaded, that none, or very few, even of such electors, could be induced to vote for a court candidate ; no, not for ten times the sum.

THERE may, Sir, be some bribery and corruption in the nation : I am afraid there will always be some ; but it is no proof of it, that strangers are sometimes chosen ; for a gentleman may have so much natural influence over a borough in his neighbourhood, as to be able to prevail with them to chuse any person he pleases to recommend ; and if upon such recommendation they chuse one or two of his friends, who are perhaps strangers to them, it is not from thence to be inferred that the two strangers were chosen their representatives by the means of bribery and corruption.

To insinuate, Sir, that money may be issued from the public treasury for bribing at elections, is really something very extraordinary, especially in those gentlemen who know how many checks are upon every shilling that can be issued from thence; and how regularly the money granted in one year for the public service of the nation, must always be accounted for, the very next session, in this house, and likewise in the other, if they have a mind to call for any such account. And as to the gentlemen in offices, if they have any advantage over country gentlemen, in having something else to depend on besides their own private fortunes, they have likewise many disadvantages: they are obliged to live here at London with their families, by which they are put to a much greater expence, than gentlemen of equal fortunes who live in the country: this lays them under a very great disadvantage, with respect to the supporting their interest in the country. The country gentleman, by living among the electors, and purchasing the necessaries for his family from them, keeps up an acquaintance and correspondence with them, without putting himself to any extraordinary charge; whereas a gentleman who lives in London has no other way of keeping up an acquaintance or correspondence among his friends in the country, but by going down once or twice a year at a very extraordinary charge, and often without any other business; so that we may conclude, a gentleman in office cannot, even in seven years, save much for distributing in ready money at the time of an election; and I really believe, if the fact were narrowly inquired into, it would appear, that the gentlemen in office are as little guilty of bribing their electors with ready money, as any other set of gentlemen in the kingdom.

THAT there are ferments often rising among the people without any just cause, is what I am surprised to hear controverted, since very late experience may convince us of the contrary: do not we know what

what a ferment was raised in the nation, towards the latter end of the late Queen's reign ? And it is well known, what a fatal change in the affairs of this nation was introduced, or at least confirmed, by an election's coming on while the nation was in that ferment : do not we know what a ferment was raised in the nation, soon after his late majesty's accession ? And if an election had then been allowed to come on, while the nation was in that ferment, it might perhaps have had as fatal effects as the former ; but thank God, this was wisely provided against by the very law which is now wanted to be repealed.

As such ferments may hereafter often happen, I must think that frequent elections will always be dangerous ; for which reason, as far as I can see at present, I shall, I believe, at all times, think it a very dangerous experiment to repeal the septennial bill.

C H A P. XI.

LORD LYTTLETON'S SPEECH ON THE REPEAL OF THE ACT CALLED THE JEW
BILL, IN THE YEAR 1753.

MR. SPEAKER,

I SEE no occasion to enter at present into the merits of the bill we pass'd the last session for the naturalization of Jews ; because I am convinced, that in the present temper of the nation, not a single foreign Jew will think it expedient to take any benefit of that act ; and therefore the repealing of it is giving up nothing. I assented to it last year in hopes it might induce some wealthy Jews to come and settle among us : in that light I saw enough utility in it, to make me incline rather to approve than dislike it ; but, that any man alive could be zealous, either for or against it, I confess I had no idea. What affects our religion, is indeed of the highest and most serious importance. God forbid we should be ever indifferent

ferent about that! but, I thought this had no more to do with religion than any turnpike act we pass in that session; and, after all the divinity that has been preached on the subject, I think so still.

RESOLUTION and steadiness are excellent qualities; but it is the application of them upon which their value depends. A wise government, Mr. Speaker, will know where to yield, as well as where to resist: and, there is no surer mark of littleness of mind in an administration, than obstinacy in trifles. Public wisdom on some occasions must condescend to give way to popular folly, especially in a free country, where the humour of the people must be considered as attentively, as the humour of a king in an absolute monarchy. Under both forms of government a prudent and honest ministry will indulge a small folly, and will resist a great one. Not to vouchsafe now and then a kind indulgence to the former, would discover an ignorance of human nature: not to resist the latter at all times, would be meanness and servility.

SIR, I look on the bill we are at present debating, not as a sacrifice made to popularity (for it sacrifices nothing) but as a prudent regard to some consequences arising from the nature of the clamour raised against the late act for naturalizing Jews, which seem to require a particular consideration.

It has been hitherto the rare and envied felicity of his Majesty's reign, that his subjects have enjoyed such a settled tranquillity, such a freedom from angry religious disputes, as is not to be paralleled in any former times. The true Christian spirit of moderation, of charity, of universal benevolence, has prevailed in the people, has prevailed in the clergy of all ranks and degrees, instead of those narrow principles, those bigotted prejudices, that furious, that implacable, that ignorant zeal, which had often done so much hurt both to the church and state. But from the ill-understood, insignificant act of parliament you are now moved to repeal, occasion has been taken to deprive us of this inestimable advantage. It is a pretence to disturb the peace of the church, to infuse idle fears into the minds of the people, and make religion itself an engine of sedition. It behoves the piety, as well as the wisdom of Parliament, to disappoint those endeavours. Sir, the very worst mischief that can be done to religion, is to pervert it to the purposes of faction. Heaven and hell are not more distant than the benevolent spirit of the gospel, and the malignant spirit of party. The most impious wars ever made were those called holy wars. He, who hates another man for being a Christian, is himself not a Christian. Christianity, Sir, breathes love, and peace, and good will to man. A temper conformable to the dictates of that holy religion has lately distinguished this nation; and a glorious distinction it was! But there is latent, at all times, in the minds of the vulgar, a spark of enthusiasm; which, if blown by the breath of a party, may, even when it seems quite extinguished, be suddenly revived and raised to a flame. The act of last session for naturalizing Jews, has very unexpectedly administered fuel to feed that flame. To what a height it may rise, if it should continue much longer, one cannot easily tell; but, take away the fuel, and it will die of itself.

It is the misfortune of all the Roman Catholic countries, that there the church and the state, the civil power and the hierarchy, have separate interests; and are continually at variance with the other. It is our happiness, that here they form but one system. While this harmony lasts, whatever hurts the church, hurts the state: whatever weakens the credit of the governors of the church, takes away from the civil power a part of its strength, and shakes the whole constitution.

SIR, I trust and believe, that by speedily passing this bill, we shall silence that obloquy, which has so unjustly been cast upon our reverend prelates (some of the most respectable that ever adorned our church) for the part they took in the act which this repeals. And it greatly concerns the whole community, that they should not lose that respect, which is so justly due due to them, by a popular clamour kept up in opposition to a measure of no importance in itself. But if the departing from that measure should not remove the prejudice so maliciously raised, I am certain that no further step you can take will be able to remove it; and therefore I hope you will stop here. This appears to be a reasonable and safe condescension, by which no body will be hurt; but all beyond this, would be dangerous weakness in government. It might open a door to the wildest enthusiasm, and to the most mischievous attacks of political disaffection working upon that enthusiasm. If you encourage and authorise it to fall on the synagogue, it will go from thence to the meeting-house, and in the end to the palace. But let us be careful to check its further progress. The more zealous we are to support Christianity, the more vigilant should we be in maintaining toleration. If we bring back persecution, we bring back the anti-christian spirit of popery; and when the spirit is here, the whole system will soon follow. Toleration is the basis of all public quiet. It is a character of freedom given to the mind, more valuable, I think, than that which secures our persons and estates. Indeed, they are inseparably connected together: for, where the mind is not free, where the conscience is enthralled, there is no freedom. Spiritual tyranny puts on the galling chains: but civil tyranny is called in, to rivet and fix them. We see it in Spain, and many other countries; we have formerly both seen and felt it in England. By the blessings of God, we are now delivered from all kinds of oppression. Let us take care, that they may never return.

C H A P. XII.

IN PRAISE OF VIRTUE.

VIRTUE is of intrinsic value and good desert, and of indispensable obligation; not the creature of will, but necessary and immutable; not local or temporary, but of equal extent and antiquity with the DIVINE MIND! not a mode of sensation, but everlasting TRUTH; not dependant on power, but the guide of all power. VIRTUE is the foundation of honour and esteem, and the source of all beauty, order, and happiness in nature. It is what confers value on all the other endowments and qualities of a reasonable being, to which they ought to be absolutely subservient, and without which the more eminent they are, the more hideous deformities and the greater curses they become. The use of it is not confined to any one stage of our existence, or to any particular situation we can be in, but reaches through all the periods and circumstances of our beings.—Many of the endowments and talents we now possess, and of which we are too apt to be proud, will cease entirely with the present state; but this will be our ornament and dignity in every future state to which we may be removed. Beauty and wit will die, learning will vanish away, and all the arts of life be soon forgot; but virtue will remain for ever. This unites us to the whole rational creation, and fits us for conversing with any order of superior natures, and for a place in any part of God's works. It procures us the approbation and love of all wise and good beings, and renders them our allies and friends.—But what is of unspeakably greater consequence is, that it makes God our friend, assimilates and unites our minds to his, and engages his almighty power in our defence.—Superior beings of all ranks are bound by it no less than ourselves. It has the same authority in all worlds that it has in this.

this. The further any being is advanced in excellence and perfection, the greater is his attachment to it, and the more is he under its influence.—To say no more; 'Tis the LAW of the whole universe; it stands first in the estimation of the Deity; its original is His nature; and it is the very object that makes Him lovely.

SUCH is the importance of Virtue.—Of what consequence, therefore, is it that we practise it?—There is no argument or motive which is at all fitted to influence a reasonable mind, which does not call us to this. One virtuous disposition of soul is preferable to the greatest natural accomplishments and abilities, and of more value than all the treasures of the world.—If you are wise, then, study virtue, and condemn every thing that can come in competition with it. Remember, that nothing else deserves one anxious thought or wish. Remember, that this alone is honour, glory, wealth, and happiness. Secure this, and you secure every thing. Lose this, and all is lost.

THE SPEECH OF BRUTUS ON THE DEATH OF CÆSAR.

ROMANS, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear. Believe me for mine honour, and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe. Censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus's love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar? this is my answer; Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves; than that Cæsar far were dead to live all freemen? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant I honour him; but as he was ambitious, I slew him. There are tears for his love, joy for his fortune, honour for his valour, and death for his ambition. Who's here so base, that would be a bond-man? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who's here so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who's here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended.—I pause for a reply——

NONE?——then none have I offended.—I have done no more to Cæsar than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences inforced, for which he suffered death.——

HERE comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony; who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the common wealth: as which of you shall not? With this I depart, that as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

GLOUCESTER'S SPEECH TO THE NOBLES.

BRAVE Peers of England, pillars of the state,
To you Duke Humphry must unload his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coin, and people in the wars?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toil his wits

To

To keep by policy what Henry got?
 Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
 Brave York, and Salisbury, victorious Warwick,
 Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy?
 Or hath mine uncle Beaufort, and myself,
 With all the learned council of the Realm,
 Studied so long, sat in the council-house,
 Early and late, debating to and fro,
 How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?
 And was his Highness in his infancy
 Crowned in Paris, in despite of foes?
 And shall these labours and these honours die?
 Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
 Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die?
 O Peers of England, shameful in this league,
 Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
 Blotting your names from books of memory;
 Razing the characters of your renown,
 Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,
 Undoing all, as all had never been.

C H A P. I.

O N H A P P I N E S S.

IT was at a time, when a certain Friend, whom I highly value, was my guest. We had been sitting together, entertaining ourselves with Shakespear. Among many of his characters, we had looked into that of Wolsey. How soon, says my friend, does the cardinal in disgrace abjure that happiness, which he was lately so fond of? Scarcely out of office, but he begins to exclaim.

Vain pomp and glory of the world! I hate ye. So true it is, that our sentiments ever vary with the season; and that, in adversity we are of one mind, in prosperity of another. As for his mean opinion, said I, of human happiness, it is a truth, which small reflection might have taught him long before. There seems little need of distress to inform us of this. I rather commend the seeming wisdom of that eastern monarch, who in the affluence of prosperity, when he was proving every pleasure, was yet so sensible of their emptiness, their insufficiency to make him happy, that he proclaimed a reward to the man, who should invent a new delight. The reward indeed was proclaimed, but the delight was not to be found. If by delight, said he, you mean some good; something conducing to real happiness; it might have been found, perhaps, and yet not fit the monarch's fancy, fancy. Is that, said I, possible? It is possible, replied he, though it had been the sovereign good itself. And indeed what wonder? Is it probable that such a mortal as an Eastern monarch; such a pampered, flattered, idle mortal, should have attention, or capacity for a subject so delicate? A subject enough to exercise the subtlest and most acute?

WHAT then is it you esteem, said I, the sovereign good to be? It should seem by your representation, to be something very uncommon. Ask me not the question, said he, you know not where it will carry us. Its general idea indeed is easy and plain; but the detail of particulars is perplexed and long; passions and opinions for ever thwart us; a paradox appears in almost every advance. Besides, did our inquiries succeed ever so happily, the very subject itself is always enough to give me pain. That, replied I, seems a paradox indeed. It is not, said he, from any prejudice, which I have conceived against it; for to man I esteem it the noblest in the world. Nor is it fit for being a subject, to which my genius will not lead me; for no subject at all times has more employed my attention. But the truth is, I can scarce ever think of it, but an unfortunate story occurs to my mind. "A certain star-gazer, with his telescope was once viewing the moon; and describing her seas, her mountains, and her territories. Says a clown to his companion, Let him spy what he pleases; we are as near to the moon, as he and all his brethren." So fares it alas! with these our moral speculations. Practice too often creeps, where theory can soar. The philosopher proves as weak, as those whom he most contemns. A mortifying thought to such as well attend it. Too mortifying replied I, to be long dwelt on. Give us rather, your general idea of the sovereign good. This is easy from your own account, however intricate the detail.

Thus then, said he, since you are so urgent, it is thus that I conceive it. The Sovereign Good, is that, that, the possession of which renders us happy. And how, said I, do we possess it? Is it sensual, or intellectual? There you are entering, said he, upon the detail. This is beyond your question. Not a small advance, said I, to indulge poor curiosity? Will you raise me a thirst, and be so cruel not to allay it? It is not, replied he, of my raising, but your own. Besides I am not certain, should I attempt to proceed, whether you will admit such authorities as it is possible I may vouch. That, said I, must be determined by their weight and character. Suppose, said he, it should be mankind; the whole human race. Would you not think it something strange, to seek of those concerning Good, who pursue it a thousand ways, and many of them contradictory? I confess, said I, it seems so. And yet continued he, were there a point, in which dissentients ever agreed, this agreement would be no mean argument in favour of its truth and justness. But where, replied I, is this agreement to be found?

He answered me by asking, what if it should appear, that there were certain original characteristics and preconceptions of Good, which were natural, uniform and common to all men; which all recognized in their various pursuits; and that the difference lay only in the applying them to particulars? This requires, said I, to be illustrated. As if, continued he, a company of travellers, in some wide forest, were all intending for one city, but each by a route peculiar to himself. The roads indeed would be various, and many perhaps false; but all who travelled, would have one end in view. It is evident, said I, they would. So fares it then, added he, with mankind in the pursuit of good. The ways indeed are many, but what they seek is One.

For instance: Did you ever hear of any, who in pursuit of their good were for living the life of a bird, an insect, or a fish. None. And why not? It would be inconsistent, answered I, with their nature. You see then, said he, they all agree in this; that what they pursue, ought to be consistent, and agreeable to their their

their proper nature. So ought it, said I, undoubtedly. If so, continued he, one pre-conception is discovered, which is common to good in general: It is, that all good is supposed something agreeable to nature. This indeed, replied I, seems to be agreed on all hands.

BUT again, said he, Is there a man scarcely to be found of a temper so truly mortified, as to acquiesce in the lowest, and shortest necessities of life? Who aims not, if he be able, at something farther, something better? I replied, scarcely one. Do not multitudes pursue, said he, infinite objects of desire, acknowledged, every one of them, to be in no respect necessities? Exquisite viands, delicious wines, splendid apparel, curious gardens; magnificent apartments adorned with pictures and sculpture; music and poetry, and the whole tribe of elegant arts? It is evident, said I. If it be, continued he, it should seem that they all considered the chief or Sovereign Good, not to be that, which conduces to bare existence or mere being; for to this the necessities alone are adequate. I replied they were. But if not this, it must be somewhat conducive to that, which is superior to mere being. It must. And what, continued he, can this be, but well-being, under the various shapes, in which differing opinions paint it? Or can you suggest any thing else? I replied, I could not. Mark here, then, continued he, another pre-conception, in which they all agree; the Sovereign Good is somewhat conducive, not to mere being, but to well-being. I replied, it had so appeared.

AGAIN, continued he. What labour, what expence, to procure those rarities, which our own poor country is unable to afford us! How is the world ransacked to its utmost verges, and luxury and arts imported from every quarter! Nay more: How do we baffle nature herself; invert her order; seek the vegetables of spring in the rigours of winter, and winter's ice during the heats of summer! I replied, we did. And what disappointment, what remorse, when endeavours fail? It is true. If this then be evident, said he, it should seem, that whatever we desire as our Chief and Sovereign Good, is something which, as far as possible, we would accommodate to all places and times. I answered, So it appeared. See then, said he, another of its characteristics, another pre-conception.

BUT farther still; What contests for wealth! What scrambling for property! What perils in the pursuit; what sollicitude in the maintenance! And why all this? To what purpose, what end? Or is not the reason plain? Is it not that wealth may continually procure us, whatever we fancy good; and make that perpetual, which would otherwise be transient? I replied, it seemed so. It is not farther desired, as supplying us from ourselves; when without it, we must be beholden to the benevolence of others, and depend on their caprice for all that we enjoy? It is true, said I, this seems a reason.

AGAIN; Is not power of every degree as much contested for, as wealth? Are not the magistracies, honours, principalities, and empire, the subjects of strife, and everlasting contention? I replied, They were. And why, said he, this? To obtain what end? Is it not to help us, like wealth, to the possession of what we desire? It is not farther to ascertain, to secure our enjoyments; that when others would deprive us, we may be strong enough to resist them? I replied it was.

OR to invert the whole; Why are there, who seek recesses the most distant and retired? Flee courts and power, and submit to parsimony and obscurity? Why all this, but from the same intention? From an opinion that small possessions, used moderately, are permanent; that larger possessions, raise envy, and are more frequently invaded; that the safety of power and dignity is more precarious, than that of retreat; and that therefore they have chosen, what is most eligible upon the whole?

It

It is not, said I, improbable, that they act by some such motive.

Do you not see then, continued he, two or three more pre-conceptions of the Sovereign Good, which are sought for by all, as essential to constitute it? And what, said I, are these? That it should not be transient, nor derived from the will of others, nor in their power to take away; but the durable, self-derived, and (if I may use the expression) in-deprivable. I confess, said I, it appears so. But we have already found it to be considered, as something agreeable to our nature; conducive, not to mere being, but to well-being; and what we aim to have accommodated to all places and times. We have.

THERE may be other characteristics, said he, but these I think sufficient. See then its idea; behold it, as collected from the original, natural, and universal pre-conceptions of all mankind. The Sovereign Good, they have taught us, ought to be something agreeable to our nature; conducive to well-being; accommodated to all places and times; durable, self-derived, and indeprivable. Your account, said I, appears just.

HARRIS.

C H A P. II.

THE SAME SUBJECT.

BRUTUS perished untimely, and Cæsar did no more.—These words I was repeating the next day to myself, when my friend appeared, and cheerfully bade me good-morrow. I could not return his compliment with an equal gaiety, being intent, somewhat more than usual, on what had passed the day before. Seeing this, he proposed a walk into the fields. The face of nature, said he, will perhaps dispel these glooms. No assistance, on my part, shall be wanting, you may be assured. I accepted his proposal; proposal; the walk began; and our former conversation insensibly renewed.

BRUTUS, said he, perished untimely, and Cæsar did no more.—It was thus, as I remember, not long since you were expressing yourself. And yet suppose their fortunes to have been exactly parallel.—Which would you have preferred? Would you have been Cæsar, or Brutus? Brutus, replied I, beyond all controversy. He asked me, why? Where was the difference, when their fortunes, as we now supposed them, were considered as the same? There seems, said I, abstract from their fortunes, something, I know not what, intrinsically preferable in the life and character of Brutus. If that, said he, be true, then must we derive it, not from the success of his endeavours, but from their truth and rectitude. He had the comfort to be conscious, that his cause was a just one. It was impossible the other should have any such feeling. I believe, said I, you have explained it.

SUPPOSE then, continued he, (it is but merely an hypothesis) suppose, I say, we were to place the Sovereign Good in such a rectitude of Conduct merely, and not in the Event. Suppose we were to fix our Happiness, not in the actual attainment of that health, that perfection of a social state, that fortunate concurrence of externals, which is congruous to our nature, and which all have a right to pursue; but solely fix it in the mere doing whatever is correspondent to such an end, even though we never attain, or are near attaining it. In fewer words; What to make our natural state the standard only to determine our conduct: and place our happiness in the rectitude of this conduct alone? On such an hypothesis (and we consider it as nothing farther) we should not want a good, perhaps, to correspond to our pre-conceptions; for this, it is evident, would be correspondent to them all. Your doctrine, replied I, is so new and strange, that though you have been copious in explaining, I can hardly yet comprehend you.

It amounts all, said he, but to this: Place your happiness, where your praise is. I asked, Where he supposed that? Not, replied he, in the pleasures which you feel, more than your disgrace lies in the pain; not in the casual prosperity of fortune, more than your disgrace in the casual adversity; but in just complete action throughout every part of life, whatever be the face of things, whether favourable, or the contrary.

BUT why then, said I, such accuracy about externals? So much pains to be informed, what are pursuable, what avoidable? It behoves the Pilot, replied he, to know the seas and the winds; the nature of tempests, calms and tides. They are the subjects, about which his art is conversant. Without a just experience of them, he can never prove himself an artist. You know we look not for his reputation either in fair gales, or in adverse; but in the skilfulness of his conduct, be these events as they happen. In like manner fares it with the moral artist. He, for a subject, has the whole of human life: health and sickness; pleasure and pain; with every other possible incident, which can befall him during his existence. If his knowledge of all these be accurate and exact, so too must his conduct, in which we place his happiness. But if this knowledge be defective, must not his conduct be defective also? I replied, So it should seem. And if his conduct, then his happiness? It is true.

You see then, continued he, even though externals were as nothing; though it was true, in their own nature, they were neither good nor evil; yet an accurate knowledge of them is, from our hypothesis, absolutely necessary. Indeed, said I, you have proved it.

He continued—Inferior artists may be at a stand, because they want materials. From their stubbornness and intractability, they may often be disappointed. But as long as life is passing, and nature continues to operate, the moral artist of life has at all times all he desires. He can never want a subject fit to exercise him in his proper calling; and that, with this happy motive to the constancy of his endeavours, that the crosser, the harsher, the more untoward the events, the greater his praise, the more illustrious his reputation.

ALL this, said I, is true, and cannot be denied. But one circumstance there appears, where your similies seem to fail. The praise indeed of the Pilot we allow to be in his conduct; but it is in the success of that conduct, where we look for his happiness. If a storm arise, and the ship be lost, we call him not happy, how well soever he may have conducted. It is then only we congratulate him, when he has reached the desired haven. Your distinction, said he, is just. And it is here lies the noble prerogative of moral artists, above all others. But yet I know not how to explain myself, I fear my doctrine will appear so strange. You may proceed, said I, safely, since you advance it but as an hypothesis.

THUS then, continued he—The end in other arts is ever distant and removed. It consists not in the mere conduct, much less in a single energy; but is the just result of many energies, each of which are essential to it. Hence, by obstacles unavoidable, it may often be retarded: nay more, may be so embarrassed, as never possibly to be attained. But in the moral of life, the very Conduct is the End; the very conduct, I say, itself, throughout every its minutest energy; because each of these, however minute, partake as truly of rectitude, as the largest combination of them, when considered collectively. Hence of all arts is this the only one perpetually complete in every instant, because it needs not, like other arts, time to arrive at that perfection, at which in every instant it is arrived already. Hence by duration it is not rendered either more or less perfect; completion, like truth, admitting no degrees, and being in no sense capable of either intension or remission. And hence too by necessary connection (which is a greater paradox than all) even that Happiness or Sovereign Good, the end of this moral art, is itself too, in every instant, consummate and complete; is neither heightened nor diminished by the quantity of its duration, but is the same to its enjoyers, for a moment or a century.

UPON this I smiled. He asked me the reason. It is only to observe, said I, the course of our inquiries. A new hypothesis has been advanced: appearing somewhat strange, it is desired to be explained. You comply with the request, and in pursuit of the explanation, make it ten times more obscure and unintelligible, than before. It is but too often the fate, said he, of us commentators. But you know in such cases what is usually done. When the comment will not explain the text, we try whether the text will not explain itself. This method, it is possible, may assist us here. The hypothesis, which we would have illustrated, was no more than this: That the Sovereign Good lay in Rectitude of Conduct; and that this Good corresponded to all our pre-conceptions. Let us examine then, whether, upon trial, this correspondence will appear to hold; and for all that we have advanced since, suffer it to pass, and not perplex us. Agreed, said I willingly, for now I hope to comprehend you.

RECOLLECT then, said he. Do you not remember that one pre-conception of the Sovereign Good was, to be accommodated to all times and places? I remember it. And is there any time, or any places, whence Rectitude of Conduct may be excluded? Is there no right action in prosperity, a right action in adversity? May there not be a decent, generous, and laudable behaviour, not only in peace, in power, and in health; but in war, in oppression, in sickness, and in death? There may.

AND what shall we say to those other pre-conceptions; to being durable, self-derived, and indeprivable? Can there be any Good so durable, as the power of always doing right? Is there any Good conceivable, so entirely beyond the power of others? Or if you hesitate, and are doubtful, I would willingly be informed, into what circumstances may fortune

fortune throw a brave honest man, where it shall not be in his power to act bravely and honestly? If there are no such, then Rectitude of Conduct, if a Good, is a good indeprivable. I confess, said I, it appears so.

BUT farther, said he; Another pre-conception of the Sovereign good was, to be agreeable to nature. It was. And can any thing be more agreeable to a rational and social animal, than rational and social conduct? Nothing. But Rectitude of conduct is with us Rational and Social Conduct. It is.

ONCE more, continued he; Another pre-conception of this Good was, to be conducive not to mere-being, but to well-being. Admit it. And can any thing, believe you, conduce so probably to the well-being of a rational social animal, as the right exercise of that reason, and of those social affections? Nothing. And what is this same exercise, but the highest Rectitude of conduct? Certainly.

HARRIS.

CHAP. III.

ON CRITICISM.

—AND how did Garrick speak the soliloquy last night? Oh, against all rules, my lord, most ungrammatically? betwixt the substantive and the adjective, which should agree together in number, case and gender, he made a breach thus,—stopping as if the point wanted settling;—and betwixt the nominative case, which your lordship knows should govern the verb, he suspended his voice in the epilogue a dozen times, three seconds and three fifths by a stop-watch. my lord, each time—Admirable grammarian!—But in suspending his voice—was the sense suspended likewise? did no expression of attitude or countenance fill up the chasm?—Was the eye silent? Did you narrowly look?—I look'd only at the stop-watch, my lord,—Excellent observer!

AND what of this new book the whole world makes such a rout about?—Oh! 'tis out of all plumb, my lord,—quite an irregular thing! not one of the angles at the four corners was a right angle.—I had my rule and compasses, &c. my lord, in my pocket.—Excellent critic!

—AND for the epic poem your lordship bid me look at;—upon taking the length, breadth, height, and depth of it, and trying them at home upon an exact scale of Bossu's—'tis out, my lord, in every one of its dimensions.—Admirable connoisseur!

—AND did you step in, to take a look at the grand picture in your way back?—Tis a melancholy daub! my lord; not one principle of the pyramid in any one group!———and what a price!———for there is nothing of the colouring of Titian———the expression of Rubens———the grace of Raphael———the purity of Dominichino———the correigiescity of Corregio———the learning of Poussin———the airs of Guido———the taste of the Carrachi's———or the grand contour of Angelo.

GRANT me patience, just Heaven!—Of all the cants which are canted in this canting world—though the cant of hypocrites may be the worst———the cant of criticism is the most tormenting!

I WOULD go fifty miles on foot, to kiss the hand of that man, whose generous heart will give up the reins of his imagination into his author's hands—be pleased he knows not why, and cares not wherefore.

WHEN Tom, an' please your honour, got to the shop there was nobody in it, but a poor negro girl, with a bunch of white feathers slightly tied to the end of a long cane, flapping away flies—not killing them——'Tis a pretty picture! said my uncle Toby—she had suffered persecution, Trim, and had learnt mercy.——

——SHE was good, an' please your honour, from nature as well as from hardships; and there are circumstances in the story of that poor friendless slut that would melt a heart of stone, said Trim; and some dismal winter's evening, when your honour is in the humour, they shall be told you with the rest of Tom's story, for it makes a part of it——

THEN do not forget, Trim, said my uncle Toby.

A NEGRO has a soul? an' please your honour, said the corporal (doubtingly)

I AM not much versed, corporal, quoth my uncle Toby, in things of that kind; but I suppose God would not leave him without one, any more than thee or me——

——IT would be putting one sadly over the head of another, quoth the corporal.

IT would so; said my uncle Toby. Why then, an' please your honour, is a black wench to be used worse than a white one?

I CAN give you no reason, said my uncle Toby—— ——ONLY, cried the corporal, shaking his head, because she has no one to stand up for her——

——'Tis that very thing, Trim, quoth my uncle Toby, which recommends her to protection, and her brethren with her;——'tis the fortune of war which has put the whip into our hands now—— where it may be hereafter, Heaven knows!—but be it where it will, the brave, Trim, will not use it unkindly.

—God forbid, said the corporal.

AMEN, responded my uncle Toby, laying his hand upon his heart.

RIVERS AND SIR HARRY.

SIR HAR. COLONEL, your most obedient: I am come upon the old business; for unless I am allowed to entertain hope of Miss Rivers, I shall be the most miserable of all human beings.

RIV. Sir Harry, I have already told you by letter, and now I tell you personally, I cannot listen to your proposals.

SIR HAR. No, Sir?

RIV. No, Sir, I have promised my daughter to Mr. Sidney; do you know that, Sir?

SIR HAR. I do; but what then? Engagements of this kind, you know—

RIV. So then, you do know I have promised her to Mr. Sidney?

SIR HAR. I do; but I also know that matters are not finally settled between Mr. Sidney and you, and I moreover know, that his fortune is by no means equal to mine, therefore—

RIV. Sir Harry, let me ask you one question before you make your consequence.

SIR HAR. A thousand if you please, Sir.

RIV. Why then, Sir, let me ask you, what you have ever observed in me or my conduct, that you desire me so familiarly to break my word? I thought, Sir, you considered me as a man of honour.

SIR

SIR HAR. And so I do, Sir, a man of the nicest honour.

RIV. And yet, Sir, you ask me to violate the sanctity of my word; and tell me directly, that it is my interest to be a rascal.—

SIR HAR. I really don't understand you, Colonel: I thought when I was talking to you, I was talking to a man who knew the world: and as you have not yet signed—

RIV. Why, this is mending matters with a witness! And so you think because I am not legally bound, I am under no necessity of keeping my word! Sir Harry, laws were never made for men of honour; they want no bond but the rectitude of their own sentiments, and laws are of no use but to bind the villains of society.

SIR HAR. Well! but my dear Colonel, if you have no regard for me, shew some little regard for your daughter.

RIV. I shew the greatest regard for my daughter by giving her to a man of honour; and I must not be insulted with any further repetition of your proposals.

SIR HAR. Insult you, Colonel! is the offer of my alliance an insult? is my readiness to make what settlements you think proper—

RIV. Sir Harry, I should consider the offer of a kingdom an insult, if it was to be purchased by the violation of my word: Besides, though my daughter shall never go a beggar to the arms of her husband, I would rather see her happy than rich; and if she has enough to provide handsomely for a young family, and something to spare for the exigencies of a worthy friend, I shall think her as affluent as if she was mistress of Mexico.

SIR HAR. Well, Colonel, I have done; but I believe—

RIV. Well, Sir Harry, and as our conference is done, we will, if you please, retire to the ladies: I shall always be glad of your acquaintance, though I cannot receive you as a son-in-law, for a union of interest I look upon as a union of dishonour, and consider a marriage for money, at best, but a legal prostitution.

FALSE DELICACY.

SIR JOHN MELVIL AND STERLING.

STERL. WHAT are your commands with me, Sir John?

SIR JOHN. After having carried the negociation between our families to so great a length, after having assented so readily to all our proposals, as well as received so many instances of your chearful compliance with the demands made on our part, I am extremely concerned, Mr. Sterling, to be the involuntary cause of any uneasiness.

STERL. Uneasiness! what uneasiness? Where business is transacted as it ought to be, and the parties understand one another, there can be no uneasiness. You agree, on such and such conditions to receive my daughter for a wife; on the same conditions I agree to receive you as a son-in-law; and as to all the rest, it follows of course, you know, as regularly as the payment of a bill after acceptance.

SIR JOHN. Pardon me, Sir; more uneasiness has arisen than you are aware of. I am myself, at this instant, in a state of inexpressible embarrassment; Miss Sterling, I know, is extremely disconcerted too; and unless you will oblige me with the assistance of your friendship I foresee the speedy progress of discontent and animosity through the whole family.

STERL. What the deuce is all this? I do not understand a single syllable.

SIR JOHN. In one word then, it will be absolutely impossible for me to fulfil my engagements in regard to Miss Sterling.

STERL.

STERL. How, Sir John? Do you mean to put an affront upon my family? What! refuse to——

SIR JOHN. Be assured, Sir, that I neither mean to affront, nor forsake your family. My only fear is, that you should desert me; for the whole happiness of my life depends on being connected with your family by the nearest and tenderest ties in the world.

STERL. Why did not you tell me, but a moment ago, it was absolutely impossible for you to marry my daughter?

SIR JOHN. True; But you have another daughter, Sir——

STERL. Well?

SIR JOHN. Who has obtained the most absolute dominion over my heart. I have already declared my passion to her; nay Miss Sterling herself is also apprised of it, and if you will but give a sanction to my present addresses, the uncommon merit of Miss Sterling will no doubt recommend her to a person of equal, if not superior rank to myself, and our families may still be allied by my union with Miss Fanny.

STERL. Mighty fine, truly! Why, what the plague do you make of us, Sir John? Do you come to market for my daughters, like servants at a statute-fair? Do you think that I will suffer you, or any man in the world, to come into my house, like the Grand Signior, and throw his handkerchief first to one, and then to t'other, just as he pleases? Do you think I drive a kind of African slave-trade with them? and——

SIR JOHN. A moment's patience, Sir! Nothing but the excess of my passion for Miss Fanny should have induced me to take any step that had the least appearance of disrespect to any part of your family? and even now I am desirous to atone for my transgression, by making the most adequate compensation, that lies in my power.

STERL.

STERL. Compensation! what compensation can you possibly make in such a case as this, Sir John?

SIR JOHN. Come, come, Mr. Sterling; I know you to be a man of sense, and a man of business, a man of the world. I will deal frankly with you; and you shall see that I do not desire a change of measures for my own gratification, without endeavouring to make it advantageous to you.

STERL. What advantage can your inconstancy be to me, Sir John?

SIR JOHN. I will tell you, Sir. You know that by the articles at present subsisting between us, on the day of my marriage with Miss Sterling, you agree to pay down the gross sum of eighty thousand pounds.

STERL. Well!

SIR JOHN. Now if you will but consent to my waving that marriage—

STERL. I agree to your waving that marriage? Impossible, Sir John!

SIR JOHN. I hope not, Sir; as on my part, I will agree to wave my right to thirty thousand pounds of the fortune I was to receive with her.

c. STERL. Thirty thousand, do you say?

an SIR JOHN. Yes, Sir; and accept of Miss Fanny with fifty thousand, instead of fourscore.

STERL. Fifty thousand—

SIR JOHN. Instead of fourscore.

STERL. Why, why, there may be something in that. Let me see; Fanny with fifty thousand instead of Betsey with fourscore. But how can this be, Sir John? For you know I am to pay this money into the hands of my Lord Ogleby; who, I believe, betwixt you and me, Sir John, is not overstocked with ready money at present; and threescore thousand of it, you know is to go to pay off the present incumbrances on the estate, Sir John.

SIR JOHN. That objection is easily obviated. Ten of the twenty thousand, which would remain as a surplus of the fourscore, after paying off the mortgage, was intended by his Lordship for my use, that we might set off with some little eclat on our marriage; and the other ten for his own. Ten thousand pounds therefore I shall be able to pay you immediately; and for the remaining twenty thousand you shall have a mortgage on that part of the estate which is to be made over to me, with whatever security you shall require for the regular payment of the interest, till the principal is duly discharged.

STERL. Why, to do you justice, Sir John, there is something fair and open in your proposal; and since I find you do not mean to put an affront upon the family —

SIR JOHN. Nothing was ever further from my thoughts, Mr. Sterling. And after all, the whole affair is nothing extraordinary; such things happen every day; and as the world has only heard generally of a treaty between the families, when this marriage takes place, no body will be the wiser, if we have but discretion enough to keep our own counsel.

STERL. True, true; and since you only transfer from one girl to the other, it is no more than transferring so much stock, you know.

SIR JOHN. The very thing.

STERL. Odso! I had quite forgot. We are reckoning without our host here. There is another difficulty —

SIR JOHN. You alarm me. What can that be?

STERL. I cannot stir a step in this business without consulting my sister Heidelberg. The family has very great expectations from her, and we must not give her any offence.

SIR JOHN. But if you come into this measure, surely she will be so kind as to consent —

STERL. I do not know that. Betsey is her darling, and I cannot tell how far she may resent any slight that seems to be offered to her favourite niece.

However,

However, I will do the best I can for you. You shall go and break the matter to her first, and by the time that I may suppose that your rhetoric has prevailed on her to listen to reason, I will step in to reinforce your arguments.

SIR JOHN. I will fly to her immediately : you promise me your assistance ?

STERL. I do.

SIR JOHN, Ten thousand thanks for it ! and now success attend me !

STERL. Harkee, Sir John !——Not a word of the thirty thousand to my sister, Sir John.

SIR JOHN. Oh, I am dumb, I am dumb, Sir.

STERL. You remember it is thirty thousand.

SIR JOHN. To be sure I do.

STERL. But Sir John ! one thing more. My Lord must know nothing of this stroke of friendship between us.

SIR JOHN. Not for the world. Let me alone ! let me alone.

STERL. And when every thing is agreed, we must give each other a bond to be held fast to the bargain.

SIR JOHN. To be sure. A bond by all means ! a bond, or whatever you please.

STERL. I should have thought of more conditions, he is in a humour to give me every thing. Why, what mere children are your fellows of quality ; that cry for a plaything one minute, and throw it by the next ! as changeable as the weather, and as uncertain as the stocks. Special fellows to drive a bargain ! and yet they are to take care of the interest of the nation truly ! Here does this whirligig man of fashion offer to give up thirty thousand pounds in hard money, with as much indifference as if it was a China orange. By this mortgage, I shall have a hold on his Terra Firma ; and if he wants more money, as he certainly will, let him have children by my daughter or no, I shall have his whole estate in a net for the benefit of my family. Well ; thus it is, that the children of citizens, who have acquired

acquired fortunes, prove persons of fashion ; and thus it is, that persons of fashion, who have ruined their fortunes, reduce the next generation to cits.

CLANDESTINE MARRIAGE.

CHAP. VII.

BELCOUR AND STOCKWELL.

STOCK. MR. Belcour, I am rejoiced to see you ; you are welcome to England.

BEL. I thank you heartily, good Mr. Stockwell ; you and I have long conversed at a distance ; now we are met, and the pleasure this meeting gives me, amply compensates for the perils I have run through in accomplishing it.

STOCK. What perils, Mr. Belcour ? I could not have thought you would have met a bad passage at this time o' year.

BEL. Nor did we : courier like, we came posting to your shores, upon the pinions of the swiftest gales that ever blew ; it is upon English ground all my difficulties have arisen ; it is the passage from the river-side I complain of.

STOCK. Ay, indeed ! What obstructions can you have met between this and the river-side ?

BEL. Innumerable ! Your town's as full of defiles as the island of Corsica ; and, I believe, they are as obstinately defended ; so much hurry, bustle, and confusion, on your quays ; so many sugar-casks, porter-butts, and common council-men, in your streets ; that unless a man marched with artillery in his front, it is more than the labour of a Hercules can effect to make any tolerable way through your town.

STOCK. I am sorry you have been so incommoded.

BEL. Why, faith, it was all my own fault ; accustomed to a land of slaves, and, out of patience with the whole tribe of custom-house extortioners, boat-men, boat-men, tide-waiters, and water-bailiffs, that beset me on all sides, worse than a swarm of musketoes, I proceeded a little too roughly to brush them away with my rattan; the sturdy rogues took this in dudgeon, and beginning to rebel, the mob chose different sides, and a furious scuffle ensued; in the course of which, my person and apparel suffered so much, that I was obliged to step into the first tavern to refit, before I could make my approaches in any decent trim.

STOCK. Well, Mr. Belcour, it is a rough sample you have had of my countrymen's spirit; but, I trust, you will not think the worse of them for it.

BEL. Not at all, not at all; I like them the better; was I only a visitor, I might, perhaps, wish them a little more tractable; but as a fellow subject, and a sharer in their freedom, I applaud their spirit, though I feel the effects of it in every bone in my skin.—Well, Mr. Stockwell, for the first time in my life, here am I in England; at the fountain head of pleasure, in the land of beauty, of arts and elegancies. My happy stars have given me a good estate, and the conspiring winds have blown me hither to spend it.

STOCK. To use it, not to waste it, I should hope; to treat it, Mr. Belcour, not as a vassal, over whom you have a wanton despotic power, but as a subject, which you are bound to govern with a temperate and restrained authority.

BEL. True Sir; most truly said; mine's a commission, not a right: I am the offspring of distress, and every child of sorrow is my brother; while I have hands to hold, therefore, I will hold them open to mankind: but, Sir, my Passions are my masters: they take me where they will; and oftentimes they leave to reason and virtue nothing but my wishes and my sighs.

STOCK. Come, come, the man who can accuse corrects himself.

BEL. Ah! that is an office I am weary of; I wish a friend would take it up: I would to Heaven you

you had leisure for the employ ; but, did you drive a trade to the four corners of the world, you would not find the task so toilsome as to keep me free from faults.

STOCK. Well, I am not discouraged ; this candour tells me I should not have the fault of self-conceit to combat ; that, at least, is not amongst the number.

BEL. No ; if I knew that man on earth who thought more humbly of me than I do of myself, I would take up his opinion and forego my own.

STOCK. And, was I to chuse a pupil, it should be one of your complexion ; so if you will come along with me, we will agree upon your admission, and enter upon a course of lectures directly.

BEL. With all my heart.

WEST INDIAN.

LORDEUSTACE AND FRAMPTON.

LD. EUST. WELL, my dear Frampton, have you secured the letters ?

FRAM. Yes, my lord, for their rightful owners.

LD. EUST. As to the matter of property, Frampton, we will not dispute much about that. Necessity, you know, may sometimes render a trespass excusable.

FRAM. I am not casuist sufficient to answer you, upon that subject ; but this I know, that you have already trespassed against the laws of hospitality and honour, in your conduct towards Sir William Evans, and his daughter—And as your friend and counsellor, both, I would advise you to think seriously, of repairing the injuries you have committed, and not increase your offence, by a farther violation.

LD. EUST. It is actually a pity you were not bred to the bar, Ned ; but I have only a moment to stay, stay, and am all impatience to know if there be a letter from Langwood, and what he says.

FRAM. I shall never be able to afford you the least information upon that subject, my lord.

LD. EUST. Surely, I do not understand you. You said you had secured the letters—Have you not read them?

FRAM. You have a right, and none but you, to ask me such a question. My weak compliance with your first proposal relative to these letters, warrants your thinking so meanly of me. But know, my lord, that though my personal affection for you, joined to my unhappy circumstances, may have betrayed me to actions unworthy of myself, I never can forget, that there is a barrier fixed before the extreme of baseness, which honour will not let me pass.

LD. EUST. You will give me leave to tell you, Mr. Frampton, that where I lead, I think you need not halt.

FRAM. You will pardon me, my lord; the consciousness of another man's errors, can never be a justification for our own; and poor, indeed, must that wretch be, who can be satisfied with the negative merit of not being the worst man he knows.

LD. EUST. If this discourse were uttered in a conventicle, it might have its effect; by setting the congregation to sleep.

FRAM. It is rather meant to rouse, than lull your lordship.

LD. EUST. No matter what it is meant for; give me the letters, Mr. Frampton.

FRAM. Yet, excuse me. I could as soon think of arming a madman's hand, against my own life, as suffer you to be guilty of a crime that will, for ever, wound your honour.

LD. EUST. I shall not come to you, to heal the wound: your medicines are too rough and coarse, for me.

FRAM. The soft poison of flattery, might perhaps please you better.

LD. EUST.

LD. EUST. Your conscience may, probably, have as much need of palliatives, as mine, Mr. Frampton, as I am pretty well convinced, that your course of life, has not been more regular, than my own.

FRAM. With true contrition, my lord, I confess part of your sarcasm to be just. Pleasure was the object of my pursuit, and pleasure I obtained, at the expence, both of health, and fortune : but yet, my lord, I broke not in upon the peace of others ; the laws of hospitality, I never violated ; nor did I ever seek to injure or seduce, the wife, or daughter, of my friend.

LD. EUST. I care not what you did ; give me the letters.

FRAM. I have no right to keep, and therefore shall surrender them, though with the utmost reluctance ; but, by our former friendship, I intreat you not to open them.

LD. EUST. That you have forfeited.

FRAM. Since it is not in my power to prevent your committing an error, which you ought, for ever, to repent of, I will not be a witness of it. There are the letters.

LD. EUST. You may perhaps, have cause to repent your present conduct, Mr. Frampton, as much as I do our past attachment.

FRAM. Rather than hold your friendship upon such terms I resign it for ever. Farewell, my lord.

Re-enter FRAMPTON.

FRAM. Ill treated as I have been, my lord, I find it impossible to leave you surrounded by difficulties.

LD. EUST. That sentiment should have operated sooner, Mr. Frampton. Recollection is seldom of use to our friends, though it may sometimes be serviceable to ourselves.

FRAM. Take advantage of your own expression, my lord, and recollect yourself. Born and educated as I have been, a gentleman, how have you injured both yourself and me, by admitting and uniting in the same confidence, your rascally servant !

LD. EUST.

LD. EUST. The exigency of my situation is a sufficient excuse to myself, and ought to have been so to the man who called himself my friend.

FRAM. Have a care, my lord, of uttering the least doubt upon that subject; for could I think you once mean enough to suspect the sincerity of my attachment to you, it must vanish at that instant.

LD. EUST. The proofs of your regard have been rather painful of late, Mr. Frampton.

FRAM. When I see my friend upon the verge of a precipice, is that a time for compliment? Shall I not rudely rush forward, and drag him from it? Just in that state you are at present, and I will strive to save you. Virtue may languish in a noble heart, and suffer her rival, vice, to usurp her power; but baseness must not enter, or she flies for ever. The man who has forfeited his own esteem, thinks all the world has the same consciousness, and therefore is what he deserves to be, a wretch.

LD. EUST. Oh, Frampton! you have lodged a dagger in my heart.

FRAM. No, my dear Eustace, I have saved you from one, from your own reproaches, by preventing your being guilty of a meanness, which you could never have forgiven yourself.

LD. EUST. Can you forgive me, and be still my friend?

FRAM. As firmly as I have been, my lord.— But let us, at present, hasten to get rid of the mean business we are engaged in, and forward the letters we have no right to detain.

SCHOOL FOR RAKES.

C H A P. IX.

DUKE AND LORD.

DUKE. NOW, my co-mates, and brothers in exile,
 Hath not old custom made this life more sweet
 Than

Than that of painted pomp? are not these woods
More free from peril, than the envious court?
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile, and say,
This is no flattery; these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am.
Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head;
And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.
—Come, shall we go, and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools,
Being native burghers of this desert city,
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads
Have their round haunches goar'd.

LORD. Indeed, my Lord,
The melancholy Jaques grieves at that:
And in that kind swears you do more usurp
Than doth your brother, that hath banished you.
To-day my Lord of Amiens, and myself,
Did steal behind him, as he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique roots peep out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood;
To the which place a poor sequestered stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish; and, indeed, my Lord,
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting; and the big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase; and thus the hairy fool,
Much marked of the melancholy Jaques,
Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift-brook,
Augmenting it with tears.

DUKE. But what said Jaques?
Did he not moralize the spectacle?

LORD.

LORD. O yes, into a thousand similes,
 First, for his weeping in the needless stream ;
 Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
 As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
 To that which had too much. Then being alone,
 Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends ;
 'Tis right, quoth he, thus misery doth part
 The flux of company. Anon a careless herd,
 Full of the pasture, jumps along by him,
 And never stays to greet him : Ay, quoth Jaques,
 Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens,
 'Tis just the fashion : wherefore do you look
 Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there ?
 Thus most invectively he pierced through
 The body of the country, city, court,
 Yea, and of this our life ; swearing, that we
 Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
 To fright the animals, and to kill them up
 In their assign'd and native dwelling-place.

DUKE. And did you leave him in this contemplation ?

LORD. We did, my Lord, weeping and commenting
 Upon the sobbing deer.

DUKE. Show me the place ;
 I love to cope him in these fullen fits,
 For then he's full of matter.

LORD. I'll bring you to him straight.

SHAKESPEARE.

C H A P. X.

DUKE AND JAQUES.

DUKE. WHY, how now, Monsieur, what a life is this,
 That your poor friend must woo your company ?
 What ? you look merrily.

JAQ. A fool, a fool ; — I met a fool i' th' forest,
 A motley fool ; a miserable varlet !

As

As I do live by food, I met a fool,
Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun,
And rail'd on Lady Fortune in good terms,
In good set terms, and yet a motley fool.
Good morrow, fool, quoth I ; No, Sir, quoth he,
Call me not fool, till Heaven hath sent me fortune ;
And then he drew a dial from his poak,
And looking on it with lack-lustre eye,
Says very wisely, It is ten o'clock :
Thus may we see, quoth he, how the world wags :
'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine,
And after one hour more 'twill be eleven ;
And so from hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale. When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative :
And I did laugh, sans intermission,
An hour by his dial. O noble fool,
A worthy fool ! motley's the only wear.

DUKE. What fool is this ?

JAQ. O worthy fool ! one that hath been a courtier,
And says, if ladies be but young and fair,
They have the gift to know it : and in his brain,
Which is as dry as the remainder bisket
After a voyage, he hath strange places cramm'd
With observations, the which he vents
In mangled forms. O that I were a fool !
I am ambitious for a motley coat.

DUKE. Thou shalt have one.

JAQ. It is my only suit ;
Provided that you weed your better judgments
Of all opinion, that grows rank in them,
That I am wise. I must have liberty
Withal, as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please ; for so fools have,
And they that are most galled with my folly,
They most must laugh. And why, Sir, must they so ?

The why is plain, as way to parish-church ;

He

He whom a fool does very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
Not to seem senseless of the bob. If not,
The wise man's folly is anatomiz'd
Even by the squand'ring glances of a fool.
Invest me in my motley, give me leave
To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of th' infected world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

DUKE. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou would'st do.

JAC. What, for a counter, would I do but good?

DUKE. Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding sin,

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
And all th' embossed sores and headed evils,
That thou with license of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

JAC. Why, who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea,
Till that the very, very means do ebb?
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say, the city-woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders?
Who can come in, and say, that I mean her;
When such a one as she, such is her neighbour?
Or what is he of basest function,
That says, his bravery is not on my cost;
Thinking, that I mean him, but therein suits
His folly to the metal of my speech?
There then; how then? what then? let me see wherein

My tongue hath wrong'd him; if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himself; if he be free,
Why, then my taxing, like a wild goose, flies
Unclaim'd of any man.

C H A P. XI.

HENRY AND LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

CH. JUST. I AM assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly,
Your Majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

P. HENRY. No! might a prince of my great hopes forget

So great indignities you laid upon me?

What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison

Th' immediate heir of England! was this easy?

May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

CH. JUST. I then did use the person of your father;

The image of his power lay then in me:

And in th' administration of his law,

While I was busy for the commonwealth,

Your Highness pleased to forget my place,

The majesty and pow'r of law and justice,

The image of the King whom I presented;

And struck me in my very seat of judgment:

Whereon, as an offender to your father,

I gave bold way to my authority,

And did commit you. If the deed were ill,

Be you contented, wearing now the garland,

To have a son set your decrees at nought:

To pluck down justice from your awful bench,

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword

That guards the peace and safety of your person:

Nay more, to spurn at your most Royal image,

And mock your working in a second body.

Question your Royal thoughts, make the case
yours;

Be now the father and propose a son;

Hear your own dignity so much profan'd;

See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted;

Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd:

K

And

And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r so silencing your son.
After this cold confid'rance, sentence me;
And, as you are a King, speak in your state,
What I have done that misbecame my place,
My person, or my Liege's sovereignty.

P. HENRY. You are right, Justice, and you weigh this well;

Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:
And I do wish your honours may increase,
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did:
So shall I live to speak my father's words.
Happy am I, that have a man so bold
That dares do justice on my proper son;
And no less happy having such a son,
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hand of justice.—You committed me;
For which I do commit into your hand
Th' unstained sword that you have us'd to bear;
With this remembrance, that you use the same
With a like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand,
You shall be as a father to my youth:
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear;
And I will stoop and humble my intents,
To your well practis'd wise directions.
And, Princes all, believe me, I beseech you;
My father is gone wild into his grave;
For in his tomb lie my affections;
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, which hath writ me down
After my seeming. Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now;
Now doth it turn and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods,
And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now call we our high court of parliament;

And

And let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best govern'd nation;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us,
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.
Our coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remember'd) all our state,
And (Heaven consigning to my good intents)
No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say,
Heav'n shorten Harry's happy life one day.

SHAKESPEARE.

C H A P. XII.

ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY AND BISHOP OF ELY.

CANT. MY Lord, I'll tell you; that self bill
Which, in th' eleventh year o' th' last King's reign,

Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scrambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of further question.

ELY. But how, my Lord, shall we resist it now?

CANT. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,

We lose the better half of our possession:
For all the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us; being valu'd thus:
As much as would maintain, to the King's honour,
Full fifteen earls, and fifteen hundred Knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supply'd;
And to the coffers of the King, beside,

A thousand pounds by th' year. Thus runs the bill.

ELY. This would drink deep.

CANT. 'Twould drink the cup and all.

ELY. But what prevention?

CANT. The King is full of grace and fair regard.

ELY. And a true lover of the holy church.

CANT. The courses of his youth promis'd it not;

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortify'd in him,
Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment,
Consideration, like an angel, came,
And whipp'd th' offending Adam out of him;
Leaving his body as a paradise,
T' envelope and contain celestial spirits.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults:
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this King.

ELY. We're blessed in the change.

CANT. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire, the King were made a Prelate.
Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You'd say, it had been all in all his study.
Lift his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music.
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences:
So that the act, and practice part of life,
Must be the mistress to this theorique.
Which is a wonder how his Grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain;

His

His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, and sequestration,
From open haunts and popularity.

ELY. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive, and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:
And so the Prince obscur'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which no doubt,
Grew like the summer-grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crecive in his faculty.

CANT. It must be so: for miracles are ceas'd:
And therefore we must needs admit the means,
How things are perfected.

H A M L E T A N D H O R A T I O.

HOR. HAIL to your Lordship!
HAM. I am glad to see you well;
Horatio,—or I do forget myself.

HOR. The same, my Lord, and your poor servant ever.

HAM. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you:
And what makes you from Wittenberg, Horatio?

HOR. A truant disposition, good my Lord.

HAM. I would not hear your enemy say so;
Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,
To make it trust of your own report
Against yourself. I know you are no truant;
But what is your affair in Elsinoor?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

HOR. My Lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

HAM. I pr'ythee, do not mock me, fellow-student;

I think it was to see my mother's wedding.

HOR. Indeed, my Lord, it follow'd hard upon.

HAM. Thrift, thrift, Horatio; the funeral bak'd meats

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage-table.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heav'n,

Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

My father——methinks I see my father.

HOR. Oh where, my Lord?

HAM. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

HOR. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

HAM. He was a man, take him for all in all,
shall not look upon his like again.

HOR. My Lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

HAM. Saw! who?——

HOR. My Lord, the King your father.

HAM. The King my father!

HOR. Season your admiration but a while,
With an attentive ear; till I deliver,
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvel to you.

HAM. For Heaven's love, let me hear.

HOR. Two nights together had these gentlemen,

Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
In the dead waste and middle of the night,
Been thus encountered: A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, cap a pie,
Appears before them, and with solemn march
Goes slow and stately by them; thrice he walk'd
By their oppress'd and fear-surprized eyes,
Within his truncheon's length; whilst they (distill'd Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear)
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy they did impart,
And I with them the third night kept the watch;
Where, as they had deliver'd both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and
good,

The apparition comes. I knew your father:
These hands are not more like.

HAM. But where was this?

HOR. My Lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

HAM. Did you not speak to it?

HOR. My Lord, did;

But answer made it none. Yet once methought
It lifted up its head, and did address

Itself to motion; like as it would speak,
But even then the morning cock crew loud;
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

HAM. 'Tis very strange.

HOR. As I do live, my honour'd Lord, 'tis true;

And we do think it writ down in our duty
To let you know of it.

HAM. Indeed, indeed, Sir, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch to-night?

HOR. We do, my Lord.

HAM. Arm'd, say you?

HOR. Arm'd, my Lord.

HAM. From top to toe?

HOR. My Lord, from head to foot.

HAM. Then saw you not his face?

HOR. Oh, yes, my Lord; he wore his beaver up.

HAM. What, look'd he frowningly?

HOR. A count'nance more in sorrow than in anger.

HAM. Pale, or red?

HOR. Nay, very pale.

HAM. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

HOR. Most constantly.

HAM. I would I had been there!

HOR. It would have much amaz'd you.

HAM. Very like. Staid it long?

HOR. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

HAM. His beard was griss'd?—no.—

HOR. It was, as I have seen it in his life,
A fable silver'd.

HAM. I'll watch to-night; perchance 'twill walk again.

HOR. I warrant you, it will

HAM. If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, tho' hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you,
If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
Let it be ten'ble in your silence still:
And whatsoever shall befall to-night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue;
I will requite your love: so fare ye well.
Upon the platform 'twixt eleven and twelve
I'll visit you.

SHAKESPEARE.

C H A P. XIV.

BRUTUS AND CASSIUS.

CAS. WILL you go see the order of the course?
BRU. Not I.

CAS. I pray you, do.

BRU. I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony,
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;
I'll leave you.

CAS. Brutus, I do observe you now of late;
I have not from your eyes that gentleness
And shew of love as I was wont to have;
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

BRU. Cassius,
Be not deceived: if I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vexed I am
Of late with passions of some difference,
Conceptions only proper to myself;
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour:

But

But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd,
Among which number, Cassius, be you one;
Nor construe any farther my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shews of love to other men.

CAS. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion;

By means whereof, this breast of mine hath buried
Thought of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

BRU. No, Cassius; for the eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from some other thing.

CAS. 'Tis just.

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirror as will turn
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortal Cæsar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

BRU. Into what dangers would you lead me,
Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me?

CAS. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear;
And since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself which yet you know not of.
And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laughèr, or did use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protector; if you know,
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know,
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the root; then hold me dangerous.

BRU. What means this shouting? I do fear the people

Chuse Cæsar for their King.

CAS. Ay, do you fear it?
Then must I think you would not have it so.

BRU. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well.
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?
If it be aught toward the general good,
Set Honour in one eye, and Death i' th' other,
And I will look on Death indifferently:
For let the gods so speed me, as I love
The name of honour more than I fear death.

CAS. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favour.
Well, honour is the subject of my story.—
I cannot tell what you and other men
Think of this life; but for my single self,
I had as lief not be, as live to be
In awe of such a thing as I myself.
I was born free as Cæsar, so were you;
We both have fed as well; and we can both
Endure the winter's cold as well as he.
For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores,
Cæsar says to me, Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?—Upon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bid him follow, so indeed he did.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of controversy.
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cæsar cry'd, help me, Cassius, or I sink.
I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear; so from the waves of Tyber
Did I the tired Cæsar: and this man
Is now become a god, and Cassius is
A wretched creature;—and must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And when the fit was on him, I did mark

How

How he did shake. 'Tis true, this god did shake ;
His coward lips did from their colour fly,
And that same eye whose bend does awe the world,
Did lose its lustre ; I did hear him groan :
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas ! it cry'd—Give me some drink, Titinius—
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone.

BRU. Another general shout !
I do believe, that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar,

CAS. Why man, he doth bestride the narrow world

Like a Colossus ; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at sometimes are masters of their fates :
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus—and Cæsar—what should be in that Cæsar ?
Why should that name be sounded, more than your's ?
Write them together ; your's is as fair a name :
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well ;
Weigh them, it is as heavy ; conjure with 'em,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meats does this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great ? Age, thou art sham'd ;
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods.
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man ?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walls incompass'd but one man ?
Oh ! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once that would have brook'd
Th' eternal devil to keep his state in Rome
As easily as a king.

BRU.

BRU. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
 What you would work me to, I have some aim:
 How I have thought of this, and of these times,
 I shall recount hereafter: for this present,
 I would not (so with love I might intreat you)
 Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
 I will consider; what you have to say,
 I will with patience hear; and find a time
 Both meet to hear, and answer such high things.
 Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
 Brutus had rather be a villager,
 Than to repute himself a son of Rome
 Under such hard conditions as this time
 Is like to lay upon us.

CAS. I am glad that my weak words
 Have struck but thus much shew of fire from Brutus.

SHAKESPEARE.

BELLARIUS, GUIDERIUS AND ARVIRAGUS.

BEL. A GOODLY day! not to keep house with such

Whose roofs as low as ours: see, boys! this gate
 Instructs you howt' adore the heav'n's; and bows to you

The morning's holy office. Gates of monarchs
 Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
 And keep their impious turbands on, without
 Good morrow to the sun. Hail, thou fair heav'n!
 We house i' th' rock, yet use thee not so hardly
 As prouder livers do.

GUID. Hail, heav'n!

ARV. Hail, heav'n!

BEL. Now for our mountain-sport, up to yond hill

Your legs are young. I'll tread these flats. Consider,
 When you, above, perceive me like a crow,

That

That it is place which lessens and sets off :
And you may then revolve what tales I told you,
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war ;
That service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd. To apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit from all things we see ;
And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. Oh, this life
Is nobler than attending for a check ;
Richer than doing nothing for a bauble ;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk.
Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his books uncross'd—no life to ours,

GUID. Out of your proof you speak ; we, poor, unfledg'd,

Have never wing'd from view o' the nest ? nor know
What air's from home. Haply this life is best,
If quiet life is best ; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known ; well corresponding
With your stiff age : but unto us it is
A cell of ign'rance ; travelling a bed ;
A prison, for a debtor that not dares
To stride a limit.

ARV. What should we speak of,
When we are old as you ? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December ? how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away ? We have seen nothing ;
We're beastly ; subtle as the fox for prey,
Like warlike as a wolf, for what we eat.
Our valour is to chase what flies ; our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

BEL. How you speak !

Did you but know the city's usuries,
And felt them knowingly ; the art o' the court,
As hard to leave, as keep ; whose top to climb,
Is certain falling ; or so slipp'ry, that
The fear's as bad as falling ; the toil of war ;
A pain, that only seems to seek out danger

I th' name of fame and honour; which dies i' th' search,

And hath as often a fland'rous epitaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many time,
Doth ill-deserve, by doing well: what's worse,
Must curt'ly at the censure.—Oh, boys this story
The world may read in me: my body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once
First with the best of note. Cymbeline lov'd me;
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: then was I as a tree,
Whose boughs did bend with fruit. But in one night,
A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves;
And left me bare to weather.

GUID. Uncertain favour!

BEL. My fault being nothing, as I have told you oft,

But that two villains (whose false oaths prevail'd
Before my perfect honour) swore to Cymbeline,
I was a confed'rate with the Romans: so
Follow'd my banishment; and, this twenty years,
This rock and these demiesnes have been my world;
Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven, than in all
The fore-end of my time — But, up to the mountains!
This is not hunter's language; he that strikes
The venison first, shall be the lord o' th' feast;
To him the other two shall minister
And we will fear no poison, which attends
In place of greater state. I'll meet you in the valleys.

DESCRIPTIVE PIECES.

C H A P. I.

S E N S I B I L I T Y.

DEAR Sensibility! source inexhausted of all that's precious in our joys, or costly in our sorrows! thou chainest thy martyr down upon his bed of straw, and it is thou who lifts him up to Heaven. Eternal Fountain of our feelings! It is here I trace thee, and this is thy divinity which stirs within me: not that in some sad and sickening moments, 'my soul shrinks back upon herself, and startles at destruction'—mere pomp of words!—but that I feel some generous joys and generous cares beyond myself—all comes from thee, great, great Sensorium of the world! which vibrates, if a hair of our head but falls upon the ground, in the remotest desert of thy creation. Touched with thee, Eugenius draws my curtain when I languish; hears my tale of symptoms, and blames the weather for the disorder of his nerves. Thou givest a portion of it sometimes to the roughest peasant who traverses the bleakest mountains.—He finds the lacerated lamb of another's flock. This moment I behold him leaning with his head against his crook, with piteous inclination looking down upon it.—Oh! had I come one moment sooner!—it bleeds to death—his gentle heart bleeds with it.

PEACE

PEACE to thee, generous swain ! I see thou walkest off with anguish—but thy joys shall balance it ; for happy is thy cottage, and happy is the sharer of it, and happy are the lambs which sport about you.

C H A P. II.

LIBERTY AND SLAVERY,

DISGUISE thyself as thou wilt, still, SLAVERY ! still thou art a bitter draught ; and though thousands in all ages have been made to drink of thee, thou art no less bitter on that account. It is thou, LIBERTY, thrice sweet and gracious goddess, whom all in public and private worship, whose taste is grateful, and ever will be so, till nature herself shall change—no tint of words can spot thy snowy mantle, or chymic power turn thy sceptre into iron—with thee to smile upon him as he eats his crust, the swain is happier than his monarch, from whose court thou art exiled. Gracious heaven ! grant me but health, thou great Bestower of it, and give me but this fair goddess as my companion ; and shower down thy mitres, if it seems good unto thy divine providence, upon those heads which are aching for them.—

PURSUING these ideas, I sat down close by my table, and leaning my head upon my hand, I began to figure to myself the miseries of confinement. I was in a right frame for it, and so I gave full scope to my imagination.

I was going to begin with the millions of my fellow-creatures born to no inheritance but slavery ; but finding, however affecting the picture was, that I could not bring it near me, and that the multitude of sad groups in it did but distract me—

—I TOOK.

—I TOOK a single captive, and having first shut him up in his dungeon, I then looked through the twilight of his grated door to take his picture.

I BEHELD his body half wasted away with long expectation and confinement, and felt what kind of sickness of the heart it was which arises from hope deferred. Upon looking nearer I saw him pale and feverish: in thirty years the western breeze had not once fanned his blood—he had seen no sun, no moon in all that time—nor had the voice of friend or kinsman breathed through his lattice. His children—

—BUT here my heart began to bleed—and I was forced to go on with another part of the portrait.

HE was sitting upon the ground upon a little straw, in the furthest corner of his dungeon, which was alternately his chair and bed: a little calendar of small sticks were laid at the head, notched all over with the dismal days and nights he had passed there—he had one of these little sticks in his hand, and with a rusty nail he was etching another day of misery to add to the heap. As I darkened the little light he had, he lifted up a hopeless eye towards the door, then cast it down—shook his head, and went on with his work of affliction. I heard his chains upon his legs, as he turned his body to lay his little stick upon the bundle—He gave a deep sigh—I saw the iron enter into his soul—I burst into tears—I could not sustain the picture of confinement which my fancy had drawn.

CORPORAL TRIM'S ELOQUENCE.

—MY young master in London is dead, said Obadiah—

—HERE is sad news, Trim, cried Susannah, wiping her eyes as Trim stepped into the kitchen,—master Bobby is dead.

I LAMENT for him from my heart and my soul, said Trim, fetching a sigh—Poor creature!—poor boy! poor gentleman!

HE was alive last Whitsuntide, said the coachman. Whitsuntide! alas! cried Trim, extending his right arm, and falling instantly into the same attitude in which he read the sermon,—what is Whitsuntide, Jonathan, (for that was the coachman's name) or Shrovetide, or any tide or time past, to this? Are we not here now, continued the corporal, (striking the end of his stick perpendicularly upon the floor so as to give an idea of health and stability) and are we not (dropping his hat upon the ground) gone! in a moment!—It was infinitely striking! Susannah burst into a flood of tears.—We are not stocks and stones.—Jonathan, Obadiah, the cook-maid, all melted.—The foolish fat scullion herself, who was scouring a fish-kettle upon her knees, was roused with it.—The whole kitchen crowded about the corporal.

“ARE we not here now,—and gone in a moment?”—There was nothing in the sentence—it was one of your self-evident truths we have the advantage of hearing every day; and if Trim had not trusted more to his hat than his head, he had made nothing at all of it.

“ARE we not here now;” continued the corporal, and are we not” (dropping his hat plumb upon the ground—and pausing, before he pronounced the word) “gone! in a moment? The descent of the hat hat was as if a heavy lump of clay had been kneaded into the crown of it.—Nothing could have expressed the sentiment of mortality, of which it was the type and forerunner, like it, his hand seemed to vanish from under it, it fell dead, the corporal's eye fixed upon it, as upon a corps,—and Susannah burst into a flood of tears.

T H E M A N O F R O S S .

—ALL our praises why should Lords engross?
Rise, honest Muse! and sing the MAN of Ross:

Pleas'd Vaga echoes through her winding bounds,
And rapid Severn hoarse applause resounds.
Who hung with woods yon mountain's sultry brow?
From the dry rock who bade the waters flow?
Not to the skies in useful columns tost,
Or in proud falls magnificently lost.
But clear and artless, pouring through the plain
Health to the sick, and solace to the swain.
Whose cause-way parts the vale with shady rows?
Whose seats the weary traveller repose?
Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise?
"The MAN of Ross," each litping babe replies.
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread!
The MAN of Ross divides the weekly bread:
He feeds yon alms-house, neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate:
Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,
The young who labour, and the old who rest.
Is any sick? The MAN of Ross relieves;
Prescribes, attends, the medicine makes, and gives.
Is there a variance? Enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more.
Despairing quacks with curses fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now a useless race.

Thrice

Thrice happy man ! enabled to pursue
 What all so wish, but want the pow'r to do !
 Oh say, what sums that gen'rous hand supply ?
 What mines, to swell that boundless charity ?

Of debts and taxes, wife and children clear,
 This man possest—five hundred pounds a year.
 Blush, Grandeur, blush ! proud Courts, withdraw your blaze !

Ye little Stars ! hide your diminish'd rays.

And what ! no monument, inscription, stone !
 His race, his form, his name almost unknown !

Who builds a Church to God, and not to fame:
 Will never mark the marble with his Name :
 Go, search it there, where to be born and die,
 Of rich and poor makes all the history ;
 Enough, that Virtue fill'd the space between ;
 Prov'd, by the ends of being, to have been.

THE COUNTRY CLERGYMAN.

NEAR yonder copse, where once the garden
 smil'd,

And still where many a garden flower grows wild ;
 There, where a few torn shrubs the place disclose,
 The village preacher's modest mansion rose.

A man he was, to all the country dear,
 And passing rich with forty pounds a year ;
 Remote from towns he ran his godly race,
 Nor e'er had chang'd, nor wish'd to change his place ;
 Unpractis'd he to fawn, or seek for power,
 By doctrines fashion'd to the varying hour ;
 Far other aims his heart had learn'd to prize,
 More skill'd to raise the wretched than to rise.
 His house was known to all the vagrant train,
 He chid their wandrings, but reliev'd their pain ;
 The long remember'd beggar was his guest,
 Whose beard descending swept his aged breast ;

The

The ruin'd spendthrift, now no longer proud.
 Claim'd kindred there, and had his claim allow'd ;
 The broken soldier, kindly bade to stay.
 Sate by his fire, and talk'd the night away ;
 Wept o'er his wounds, or tales of sorrow done,
 Shoulder'd his crutch, and shew'd how fields were won.
 Pleas'd with his guests, the good man learn'd to glow,
 And quite forgot their vices in their woe :
 Careless their merits, or their faults to scan,
 His pity gave ere charity began.

Thus to relieve the wretched was his pride,
 And even his failings lean'd to Virtue's side ;
 But in his duty prompt at every call,
 He watch'd and wept, he pray'd, and felt, for all.
 And, as a bird each fond endearment tries,
 To tempt its new fledg'd offspring to the skies ;
 He tried each art, reprov'd each dull delay,
 Allur'd to brighter worlds, and led the way.

Beside the bed where parting life was laid,
 And sorrow, guilt, and pain, by turns dismay'd,
 The reverend champion stood. At his controul,
 Despair and anguish fled the struggling soul ;
 Comfort came down the trembling wretch to raise,
 And his last faltering accents whisper'd praise.

At church, with meek and unaffected grace,
 His looks adorn'd the venerable place ;
 Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
 And fools, who came to scoff, remain'd to pray.
 The service past, around the pious man,
 With ready zeal each honest rustic ran ;
 Even children follow'd with endearing wile
 And pluck'd his gown, to share the good man's smile.
 His ready smile a parent's warmth express'd,
 Their welfare pleas'd him, and their cares distress'd ;
 To them his heart, his love, his griefs were given,
 But all his serious thoughts had rest in Heaven.
 As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
 Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
 Tho' round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
 Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

THE W I S H.

CONTENTMENT, parent of delight,
 So much a stranger to our sight,
 Say, goddess, in what happy place,
 Mortals behold thy blooming face ;
 Thy gracious auspices impart,
 And for thy temple choose my heart.
 They, whom thou deignest to inspire,
 Thy science learn, to bound desire ;
 By happy alchymy of mind
 They turn to pleasure all they find ;
 They both disdain in outward mein
 The grave and solemn garb of Spleen,
 And meretricious arts of dress,
 To feign a joy and hide distress :
 Unmov'd when the rude tempest blows ;
 Without an opiate they repose ;
 And cover'd by your shield, defy
 The whizzing shafts, that round them fly ;
 Nor meddling with the gods' affairs,
 Concern themselves with distant cares ;
 But place their bliss in mental rest,
 And feast upon the good possess'd.

Forc'd by soft violence of pray'r,
 The blithsome goddess sooths my care,
 I feel the deity inspire,
 And thus she models my desire.
 Two hundred pounds half-yearly paid,
 Annuity securely made,
 A farm some twenty miles from town,
 Small, tight, salubrious, and my own ;
 Two maids, that never saw the town,
 A serving man not quite a clown,
 A boy to help to tread the mow,
 And drive while t'other holds the plough ;
 A chief of temper form'd to please,
 Fit to converse, and keep the keys ;

And

And better to preserve the peace,
 Commission'd by the name of niece ;
 With understandings of a size
 To think their master very wise.
 May heav'n (it's all I wish for) send
 One genial room to treat a friend,
 Where decent cup-board, little plate,
 Display benevolence, not state.
 And may my humble dwelling stand
 Upon some chosen spot of land :
 A pond before full to the brim,
 Where cows may cool, and geese may swim :
 Behind a green like velvet neat,
 Soft to the eye, and to the feet ;
 Where od'rous plants in evening fair
 Breathe all around ambrosial air.
 From Eurus, foe to kitchen ground,
 Fenc'd by a slope with bushes crown'd.
 Fit dwelling for the feather'd throng,
 Who pay their quit-rents with a song :
 With op'ning views of hill and dale,
 Which sense and fancy too regale,
 Where the half-cirque, which vision bounds,
 Like amphitheatre surrounds ;
 And woods impervious to the breeze,
 Thick phalanx of embodied trees,
 From hills through plains in dusk array
 Extended far, repel the day.
 Here stillness, height, and solemn shade
 Invite, and contemplation aid :
 Here nymphs from hollow oaks relate
 The dark decrees and will of fate,
 And dreams beneath the spreading beech
 Inspire and docile fancy teach,
 While soft as breezy breath of wind,
 Impulses rustle through the mind :
 Here Dryads, scorning Phœbus' ray,
 While Pan melodious pipes away,
 In measur'd motions frisk about,
 'Till old Silenus puts them out.

There see the clover, pea, and bean,
 Vie in variety of green ;
 Fresh pastures speckled o'er with sheep,
 Brown fields their fallow sabbaths keep,
 Plump Ceres golden tresses wear,
 And poppy-top-knots deck her hair,
 And silver-streams through meadows stray,
 And Naiads on the margin play,
 And lesser nymphs on side of hills
 From play-thing urns pour down the rills.

Thus shelter'd, free from care and strife,
 May I enjoy a calm through life ;
 See faction safe in low degree,
 As men at land see storms at sea,
 And laugh at miserable elves,
 Not kind, so much as to themselves,
 Curs'd with such souls of base alloy,
 As can possess, but not enjoy ;
 Debarr'd the pleasure to impart
 By av'rice, sphincter of the heart,
 Who wealth, hard earn'd by guilty cares,
 Bequeath untouch'd to thankless heirs.
 May I, with look ungloom'd by guile,
 And wearing Virtue's liv'ry smile,
 Prone the distressed to relieve,
 And little trespasses forgive,
 With income not in fortune's pow'r,
 And skill to make a busy hour,
 With trips to town life to amuse,
 To purchase books, and hear the news,
 To see old friends, brush off the clown,
 And quicken taste at coming down,
 Unhurt by sickness' blasted rage,
 And slowly mellowing in age,
 When Fate extends its gathering gripe,
 Fall off like fruit grown fully ripe,
 Quit a worn being without pain,
 In hope to blossom soon again.

G R O N G A R H I L L.

SILENT nymph, with curious eye!
 Who, the purple evening lie
 On the mountain's lonely van,
 Beyond the noise of busy man,
 Painting fair the form of things,
 While the yellow linnet sings;
 Or the tuneful nightingale
 Charms the forest with her tale;
 Come with all thy various hues,
 Come and aid thy sister Muse:
 Now while Phœbus riding high
 Gives lustre to the land and sky!
 Grongar Hill invites my song,
 Draw the landskip bright and strong;
 Grongar, in whose mossy cells
 Sweetly musing Quiet dwells;
 Grongar, in whose silent shade,
 For the modest Muses made,
 So oft I have, the evening still,
 At the fountain of a rill.
 Sate upon a flow'ry bed,
 With my hand beneath my head;
 While stray'd my eyes o'er Towy's flood,
 Over mead, and over wood,
 From house to house, from hill to hill,
 'Till contemplation had her fill.

About his chequer'd sides I wind,
 And leave his brooks and meads behind,
 And groves and grottoes where I lay,
 And vistas shooting beams of day:
 Wide and wider spreads the vale;
 As circles on a smooth canal;
 The mountains round, unhappy fate!
 Sooner or later, of all height,

L

Withdraw

Withdraw their summits from the skies,
 And lessen as the others rise ;
 Still the prospect wider spreads,
 Adds a thousand woods and meads,
 Still it widens, widens still,
 And sinks the newly-risen hill. —

Now, I gain the mountains brow ;
 What a landskip lies below !
 No clouds, no vapours inteneve,
 But the gay, the open scene
 Does the face of nature show,
 In all the hues of heaven's bow !
 And, swelling to embrace the light,
 Spreads around beneath the sight. —
 Old castles on the cliffs arise,
 Proudly tow'ring in the skies !
 Rushing from the woods, the spires
 Seem from hence ascending fires !
 Half his beams Apollo sheds
 On the yellow mountain-heads !
 Gilds the fleeces of the flocks,
 And glitters on the broken rocks ! —

Below me trees unnumber'd rise,
 Beautiful in various dyes :
 The gloomy pine, the poplar blue,
 The yellow beech, the sable yew,
 The slender fir, that taper grows,
 The sturdy oak, with broad-spread boughs,
 And beyond, the purple grove,
 Haunt of Phillis, queen of love !
 Gaudy as the opening dawn,
 Lies a long and level lawn,
 On which a dark hill, steep and high,
 Holds and charms the wand'ring eye ;
 Deep are his feet in Towy's flood,
 His sides are cloth'd with waving wood,
 And ancient towers crown his brow,
 That cast an awful look below ; —
 Whose ragged walls the ivy creeps,
 And with her arms from falling keeps ;

So both a safety from the wind
On mutual dependence find.

'Tis now the raven's bleak abode ;
'Tis now th' apartment of the toad ;
And there the fox securely feeds ;
And there the pois'nous adder breeds,
Conceal'd in ruins, moss and weeds :
While, ever and anon, there falls
Huge heaps of hoary moulder'd walls.

Yet time has been, that lifts the low,
And level lays the lofty brow,
Has seen this broken pile compleat,
Big with the vanity of state ;
But transient is the smile of fate !

A little rule, a little sway,
A sunbeam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.

And see the rivers how they run,
Through woods and meads, in shade and sun,
Sometimes swift, and sometimes slow,
Wave succeeding wave, they go
A various journey to the deep,
Like human life to endless sleep !
Thus is nature's vesture wrought,
To instruct our wand'ring thought ;
Thus she dresses green and gay,
To disperse our cares away.

Ever charming, ever new,
When will the landskip tire the view !
The fountain's fall, the river's flow,
The woody vallies, warm and low ;
The windy summit, wild and high,
Roughly rushing on the sky ;
The pleasant seat, the ruin'd tow'r,
The naked rock, the shady bow'r ;
The town and village, dome and farm,
Each give each a double charm,
As pearls upon an Æthiop's arm.

See on the mountain's southern side,
 Where the prospect opens wide,
 Where the evening gilds the tide ;
 How close and small the hedges lie ;
 What streaks of meadows cross the eye !
 A step methinks may pass the stream ;
 So little distant dangers seem ;
 So we mistake the future's face,
 Ey'd through hope's deluding glass ;
 As yon summit soft and fair,
 Clad in colours of the air,
 Which to those who journey near,
 Barren, brown, and rough appear,
 Still we tread the same coarse way,
 The present's still a cloudy day,

O may I with myself agree,
 And never covet what I see !
 Content me with an humble shade,
 My passions tam'd, my wishes laid ;
 For while our wishes wildly roll,
 We banish quiet from the soul :
 'Tis thus the busy beat the air ;
 And misers gather wealth and care.

Now, ev'n now, my joy runs high,
 As on the mountain-turf I lie ;
 While the wanton Zephyr sings,
 And in the vale perfumes his wings ;
 While the waters murmur deep ;
 While the shepherd charms his sheep ;
 While the birds unbounded fly,
 And with music fill the sky,
 Now' ev'n now, my joys run high.

Be full, ye courts, be great who will,
 Search for Peace with all your skill :
 Open wide the lofty door,
 Seek her on the marble floor,
 In vain you search, she is not there ;
 In vain ye search the domes of care !
 Grass and flowers Quiet treads,
 On the meads and mountain-heads,

Along

Along with Pleasure, close ally'd,
 Ever by each other's side :
 And often by the murmuring rill,
 Hears the thrush, while all is still,
 Within the groves of Grongar Hill.

HYMN TO ADVERSITY.

DAUGHTER of Jove, relentless power,
 Thou Tamer of the human breast,
 Whose iron scourge and tott'ring hour,
 The bad affright, afflict the best !
 Bound in thy adamant chain,
 The proud are taught to taste of pain,
 And purple tyrants vainly groan
 With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy fire to send on earth
 Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
 To thee he gave the heavenly birth,
 And bade to form her infant mind.
 Stern rugged nurse ! thy rigid lore
 With patience many a year the bore :
 What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
 And from her own she learn'd to melt at other's woe.

Scared at thy frown terrific, fly
 Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
 Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
 And leave us leisure to be good.
 Light they disperse, and with them go
 The summer Friend, the flattering Foe ;
 By vain Prosperity receiv'd,
 To her they vow their truth, and are again believ'd.

Wisdom in sable garb array'd
 Immers'd in rapt'rous thought profound,

And Melancholy, silent maid,
 With leaden eye, that loves the ground,
 Still on thy solemn steps attend :
 Warm Charity, the gen'ral friend,
 With Justice to herself severe,
 And Pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh, gently on thy suppliant's head,
 Dread goddess, lay thy chast'ning hand !
 Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,
 Nor circled with the vengeful band,
 (As by the impious thou art seen)
 With thund'ring voice, and threat'ning mien,
 With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
 Despair and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty.

Thy form benign, oh Goddess, wear,
 Thy milder influence impart,
 Thy philosophic train be there
 To soften, not to wound my heart.
 The gen'rous spark extinct revive,
 Teach me to love and to forgive,
 Exact my own defects to scan,
 What others are, to feel, and know myself a man.

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

YE distant spires, ye antique towers,
 That crown the watery glade,
 Where grateful Science still adores
 Her HENRY's holy shade :
 And ye, that from the stately brow
 Of WINDSOR's heights th' expanse below
 Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
 Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
 His silver-winding way.

Ah happy hills, ah pleasing shade,
 Ah fields belov'd in vain,
 Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
 A stranger yet to pain !
 I feel the gales, that from ye blow,
 A momentary bliss bestow,
 As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
 My weary soul they seem to sooth,
 And, redolent of joy and youth,
 To breathe a second spring.

Say, Father THAMES (for thou hast seen
 Full many a sprightly race,
 Disporting on thy margent green,
 The paths of pleasure trace)
 Who foremost now delight to cleave
 With pliant arm thy glassy wave ?
 The captive linnet to enthrall ?
 What idle progeny succeed
 To chase the rolling circle's speed,
 Or urge the flying ball ?

While some on earnest business bent
 'Their murmur'ing labours ply
 'Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint
 To sweeten liberty :
 Some bold adventurers disdain
 The limits of their little reign,
 And unknown regions dare descry :
 Still as they run they look behind,
 They hear a voice in every wind,
 And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
 Less pleasing when possess'd ;
 The tear forgot as soon as shed,
 The sunshine of the breast :
 Theirs buxom health of rosy hue,
 Wild wit, invention ever-new,

And lively chear of vigour born ;
 The thoughtless day, the easy night,
 The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
 That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas, regardless of their doom,
 The little victims play !
 No sense have they of ills to come,
 No care beyond to-day :
 Yet see how all around them wait
 The ministers to human fate,
 And black misfortune's baleful train !
 Ah, shew them where in ambush stand
 To seize their prey the murth'rous band !
 Ah, tell them, they are men !

These shall the fury Passions tear,
 The vultures of the mind,
 Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
 And Shame that skulks behind ;
 Or pining Love shall waste their youth,
 Or Jealousy with rankling tooth,
 That inly gnaws the secret heart,
 And Envy wan, and faded Care,
 Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair,
 And Sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
 Then whirl the wretch from high,
 To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
 And grinning Infamy.
 The stings of Falshood those shall try,
 And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye,
 That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow ;
 And keen Remorse with blood defil'd,
 And moody Madness laughing wild
 Amid severest woe.

Lo, in the vale of years beneath
 A griesly troop are seen,
 The pained family of Death,
 More hideous than their queen.

This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
 That every labouring sinew strains,
 Those in the deeper vitals rage :
 Lo, Poverty, to fill the band
 That numbs the soul with icy hand,
 And slow-consuming Age.

To each his sufferings: all are men,
 Condemn'd alike to groan;
 The tender for another's pain,
 Th' unfeeling for his own.
 Yet ah! why should they know their fate?
 Since sorrow never comes too late,
 And happiness too swiftly flies.
 Thought would destroy their paradise.
 No more; where ignorance is bliss,
 'Tis folly to be wise.

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY
CHURCH-YARD.

THE curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
 The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
 The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
 And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
 And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
 Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
 And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds;

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tow'r,
 The mooping owl does to the moon complain
 Of such, as wand'ring near her secret bow'r,
 Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mould'ring heap,
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid,
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn,
The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
Or busy house-wife ply her evening care
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kifs to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke;
How jocund did they drive their team afield!
How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike th' inevitable hour,
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,
If Mem'ry o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where thro' the long-drawn ayle and fretted vault,
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.

Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can Honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or Flatt'ry sooth the dull cold ear of Death?

Perhaps

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
 Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
 Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
 Or wak'd to extasy the living lyre.

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page
 Rich with the spoils of time did ne'er unroll;
 Chill-Penury repress'd their noble rage,
 And froze the genial current of the soul!

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
 The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear:
 Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
 And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village-Hampden, that with dauntless breast
 The little Tyrant of his fields withstood;
 Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
 Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.

Th' applause of list'ning senates to command,
 The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
 To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
 And read their hist'ry in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbade: nor circumscrib'd alone
 Their growing virtues, but their crimes confin'd;
 Forbade to wade through slaughter to a throne,
 And shut the gates of mercy on mankind.

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
 To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
 Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
 With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
 Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
 Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
 They kept the noiseless tenor of their lay.

Yet ev'n these bones from insult to protect
 Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
 With uncouth rhimes and shapeless sculpture deck'd,
 Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd muse,

The place of fame and elegy supply :
 And many a holy text around she strews,
 That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who to dumb Forgetfulness a prey,
 This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
 Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
 Nor cast one longing ling'ring look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
 Some pious drops the closing eye requires,
 Ev'n from the tomb the voice of Nature cries,
 Ev'n in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who mindful of th' unhonoured dead
 Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;
 If chance, by lonely contemplation led,
 Some kindred Spirit shall inquire thy fate,

Haply some hoary-headed Swain may say,
 ' Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
 ' Brushing with hasty steps the dews away
 ' To meet the sun upon the upland lawn.

' There at the foot of yonder nodding beech
 ' That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
 ' His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
 ' And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

' Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn,
 ' Mutt'ring his wayward fancies he would rove,
 ' Now drooping, woful wan, like one forlorn,
 ' Or craz'd with care, or cross'd in hopeless love.

- ' One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill,
 ' Along the heath, and near his fav'rite tree;
 ' Another came; not yet beside the rill,
 ' Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he;

 ' The next with dirges due in sad array
 ' Slow thro' the church-way path we saw him borne.
 ' Approach and read (for thou can'st read) the lay,
 ' 'Grav'd on the stone beneath yon aged thorn.

*HERE rests his head upon the lap of Earth
 A Youth to Fortune and to Fame unknown;
 Fair Science frown'd not on his humble birth,
 And Melancholy mark'd him for her own.*

*Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
 Heav'n did a recompence as largely send:
 He gave to Mis'ry all he had, a tear,
 He gain'd from Heav'n ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.*

*No farther seek his merits to disclose,
 Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
 (There they alike in trembling hope repose.)
 The bosom of his Father and his God.*

WARRINGTON ACADEMY.

MARK where its simple front yon mansion rears,
 The nursery of men for future years!
 Here callow chiefs and embryo statesmen lie,
 And unfledg'd poets short excursions try:
 While Mersey's gentle current, which too long
 By fame neglected, and unknown to song,
 Between the rushy banks, (no poet's theme)
 Had crept inglorious, like a vulgar stream,
 Reflects th' ascending seats with conscious pride,
 And dares to emulate a classic tide,
 Soft music breathes along each opening shade,
 And soothes the dashing of his rough cascade,
 With mystic lines his sands are figur'd o'er,
 And circles trac'd upon the letter'd shore.
 Beneath his willows rove th' inquiring youth,
 And court the fair majestic form of Truth.
 Here nature opens all her secrets springs,
 And heav'n born Science plumes her eagle-wings:
 Too long had bigot rage, with malice swell'd,
 Crush'd her strong pinions, and her flight withheld;
 Too long to check her ardent progress strove:
 So writhes the serpent round the bird of Jove;
 Hangs on her flight, restrains her tow'ring wing,
 Twists its dark folds, and points its venom'd sting.
 Yet still (if aught aright the Muse divine)
 Her rising pride shall mock the vain design;
 On sounding pinions yet aloft shall soar,
 And thro' the azure deep untravell'd paths explore.
 Where science smiles, the Muses join the train;
 And gentlest arts and purest manners reign.
 Ye generous youth, who love this studious shade,
 How rich a field is to your hopes display'd!
 Knowledge to you unlocks the classic page;
 And virtue blossoms for a better age.
 Oh golden days! oh bright unvalued hours!
 What bliss (did ye but know that bliss) were yours!
 With

With richest stores your glowing bosoms fraught,
 Perception quick, and luxury of thought;
 The high designs that heave the labouring soul,
 Panting for fame, impatient of controul;
 And fond enthusiastic thought, that feeds
 On pictur'd tales of vast heroic deeds;
 And quick affections, kindling into flame
 At virtue's or their country's honour'd name;
 And spirits light, to every joy in tune;
 And friendship, ardent as a summer's noon;
 And generous scorn of vice's venal tribe;
 And proud disdain of interest's sordid bribe;
 And conscious honour's quick instinctive sense;
 And smiles unforc'd; and easy confidence;
 And vivid fancy; and clear simple truth;
 And all the mental bloom of vernal youth.

How bright the scene to fancy's eye appears,
 Thro' the perspective of long distant years,
 When this, this little group their country calls
 From academic shades and learned halls,
 To fix her laws, her spirit to sustain,
 And light up glory thro' her wide domain!
 Their various tastes in different arts, display'd,
 Like temper'd harmony of light and shade,
 With friendly union in one mass shall blend;
 And this adorn the state, and that defend.
 These the sequester'd shade shall cheaply please,
 With learned labour, and inglorious ease:
 While those, impell'd by some resistless force,
 O'er seas and rocks shall urge their vent'rous course;
 Rich fruits matur'd by glowing suns behold,
 And China's groves of vegetable gold;
 From every land the various harvest spoil,
 And bear the tribute to their native soil:
 But tell each land (while every toil they share,
 Firm to sustain, and resolute to dare,)
 MAN is the nobler growth our realms supply,
 And SOULS are ripen'd in our northern sky,
 Some pensive creep along the shelly shore;
 Unfold the silky texture of a flower;

With

With sharpen'd eyes inspect an hornet's sting,
 And all the wonders of an insect's wing.
 Some trace with curious search the hidden cause,
 Of nature's changes, and her various laws;
 Untwist her beauteous web, disrobe her charms,
 And hunt her to her elemental forms:
 Or prove what hidden powers in herbs are found
 To quench disease and cool the burning wound;
 With cordial drops the fainting head sustain,
 Call back the flitting soul, and still the throbs of pain.
 The patriot passion this shall strongly feel,
 Ardent, and glowing with undaunted zeal;
 With lips of fire shall plead his country's cause,
 And vindicate the majesty of laws.
 This, cloath'd with Britain's thunder, spread alarms
 Thro' the wide earth, and shake the pole with arms.
 That, to the sounding lyre his deeds rehearse,
 Enshrine his name in some immortal verse,
 To long posterity his praise consign,
 And pay a life of hardships by a line:
 While others, consecrate to higher aims,
 Whose hallow'd bosoms glow with purer flames,
 Love in their heart, persuasion in their tongue,
 With words of peace shall charm the list'ning throng,
 Draw the dread veil that wraps th' eternal throne,
 And launch our souls into the bright unknown.

C H A P. XII.

O D E T O C O N T E N T.

O THOU, the nymph with placid eye!
 O seldom found, yet ever nigh!
 Receive my temperate vow.
 Not all the storms that shake the pole
 Can e'er disturb thy halcyon soul,
 And smooth unalter'd brow.

O come

O come in simplest vest array'd,
 With all thy sober cheer displayed
 To bless my longing sight;
 Thy mein compos'd, thy even pace,
 Thy meek regard, thy matron grace,
 And chaste subdued delight.

No more by varying passions beat,
 O gently guide my pilgrim feet
 To find thy hermit cell;
 Where in some pure and equal sky
 Beneath thy soft indulgent eye
 The modest virtues dwell.

Simplicity in attic vest,
 And Innocence with candid breast,
 And clear undaunted eye;
 And Hope, who points to distant years,
 Fair opening thro' this vale of tears
 A vista to the sky.

There Health, thro' whose calm bosom glide
 The temperate joys in even tide,
 That rarely ebb or flow;
 And Patience there, thy sister meek,
 Presents her mild, unvarying cheek
 To meet the offered blow.

Her influence taught the Phrygian sage
 A tyrant master's wanton rage
 With settled smiles to meet:
 Inur'd to toil and bitter bread
 He bow'd his meek submitted head,
 And kiss'd thy fainted feet.

But thou, oh Nymph retir'd and coy!
 In what brown hamlet dost thou joy
 To tell thy tender tale?
 The lowliest children of the ground,
 Moss-rose and violet blossom round,
 And lily of the vale.

O say what soft propitious hour
 I best may chuse to hail thy power,
 And court thy gentle sway?
 When Autumn, friendly to the Muse,
 Shall thy own modest tints diffuse,
 And shed thy milder day:

When Eve, her dewy star beneath
 Thy balmy spirit loves to breathe,
 And every storm is laid;
 If such an hour was e'er thy choice,
 Oft lest me hear thy soothing voice
 Low whispering thro' the shade.

MRS. BAREAULD.

O D E t o F E A R.

THOU, to whom the world unknown
 With all its shadowy shapes is shewn;
 Who seest appall'd th' unreal scene
 While Fancy lifts the veil between:
 Ah Fear! ah frantic Fear!
 I see, I see thee near.
 I know thy hurried step, thy haggard eye!
 Like thee I start, like thee disorder'd fly;
 For, lo what monsters in thy train appear!
 Danger, whose limbs of giant mould
 What mortal eye can fix'd behold?
 Who stalks his round, an hideous form,
 Howling amidst the midnight storm,
 Or throws him on the ridgy steep:
 Of some loose hanging rock to sleep:
 And with him thousand phantoms join'd,
 Who prompt to deeds accurs'd the mind:
 And those, the fiends, who near allied,
 O'er Nature's wounds and wrecks preside;

While

While Vengeance, in the lurid air,
 Lifts her red arm, expos'd and bare :
 On whom that ravening Brood of fate,
 Who lap the blood of Sorrow, wait :
 Who, Fear, this ghastly train can see,
 And look not madly wild, like thee ?

Thou who such weary lengths hast past,
 Where wilt thou rest, mad Nymph, at last ?
 Say wilt thou shroud in haunted cell,
 Where gloomy Rape and Murder dwell ?
 Or in some hollow'd seat,
 'Gainst which the big waves beat,
 Hear drowning seamen's cries in tempests brought ?
 Dark power, with shuddering meek submitted
 thought,

Be mine to read the visions old,
 Which thy awakening bards have told :
 And, lest thou meet my blasted view,
 Hold each strange tale devoutly true ;
 Ne'er be I found, by thee o'er-aw'd,
 In that thrice-hallow'd eve abroad,
 When ghosts, as cottage-maids believe,
 Their pebbled beds permitted leave,
 And goblins haunt from fire or fen,
 Or mine, or flood, the walks of men !

O thou whose spirit most possessest
 The sacred seat of Shakespear's breast !
 By all that from thy prophet broke,
 In the divine emotions spoke ;
 Hither again thy fury deal,
 Teach me but once like him to feel :
 His cypress wreath my meed decree,
 And I, O Fear ! will dwell with thee !

SAY, will no white-rob'd Son of Light,
 Swift-darting from his heav'nly height,
 Here deign to take his hallow'd stand ;
 Here wave his amber locks ; unfold
 His pinions cloth'd with downy gold ;
 Here smiling stretch his tutelary wand ?
 And you, ye host of Saints, for ye have known
 Each dreary path in Life's perplexing maze,
 Tho' now ye circle yon external throne
 With harpings high of inexpressive praise,
 Will not your train descend in radiant state,
 To break with Mercy's beam this gathering cloud of Fate ?

'Tis silence all. No son of Light
 Darts swiftly from his heav'nly height ;
 No train of radiant Saints descend.
 " Mortals, in vain ye hope to find,
 " If guilt, if fraud has stain'd your mind,
 " Or Saint to hear, or angel to defend."
 So TRUTH proclaims. I hear the sacred sound
 Burst from the centre of her burning throne :
 Where aye she sits with star-wreath'd lustre crown'd
 A bright Sun clasps her adamant zone.
 So TRUTH proclaims : her awful voice I hear :
 With many a solemn pause it slowly meets my ear.

" Attend, ye Sons of Men ; attend, and say,
 Does not enough of my refulgent ray
 Break thro' the veil of your mortality ?
 Say, does not reason in this form descry

Unnum-

Unnumber'd nameless glories, that surpass
The Angel's floating pomp, the Seraph's glowing grace?

Shall then your earth-born daughters vie
With me? Shall she, whose brightest eye
But emulates the diamond's blaze,
Whose cheek but mocks the peaches bloom,
Whose breath the hyacinth's perfume,
Whose melting voice the warbling wood-lark's lays,
Shall she be deem'd my rival? Shall a form
Of elemental dross, of mould'ring clay,
Vie with these charms imperial? The poor worm
Shall prove her contest vain. Life's little day
Shall pass, and she is gone: while I appear Flush'd with the bloom of youth thro' Heav'n's eternal year.

Know, Mortals, know, ere first ye sprung,
Ere first these orbs in æther hung,
I shone amid the heav'nly throng.
These eyes beheld Creation's day,
This voice began the choral lay,
And taught Archangels their triumphant song.
Pleas'd I survey'd bright Nature's gradual birth,
Saw infant Light with kindling lustre spread,
Soft vernal fragrance clothe the flow'ring earth,
And Ocean heave on his extended bed;
Saw the tall pine aspiring pierce the sky,
The tawny lion stalk, the rapid eagle fly.

Last, Man arose, erect in youthful grace,
Heav'n's hallow'd image stamp'd upon his face,
And, as he rose, the high bequest was giv'n,
"That I alone of all the host of heav'n,
"Should reign Protectress of the godlike Youth."

Thus the Almighty spake: he spake and call'd me TRUTH.

O D E T O F A N C Y.

O PARENT of each lovely Muse,
 Thy spirit o'er my soul diffuse,
 O'er all my artless songs preside,
 My footsteps to thy temple guide,
 To offer at thy turf-built shrine,
 In golden cups no costly wine,
 No murder'd fatling of the flock,
 But flowers and honey from the rock.

O Nymph with loosely-flowing hair,
 With buskin'd leg, and bosom bare,
 Thy waist with myrtle-girdle bound
 Thy brows with Indian feathers crown'd,
 Waving in thy snowy hand
 An all-commanding magic wand,
 Of pow'r to bid fresh gardens grow
 'Mid careless Lapland's barren snow,
 Whose rapid wings thy flight convey
 Thro' air, and over earth and sea,
 While the various landskip lies
 Conspicuous to thy piercing eyes!
 O lover of the desert, hail!
 Say, in what deep and pathless vale,
 Or on what hoary mountain's side,
 'Midst falls of water you reside,
 'Midst broken rocks, a rugged scene,
 With green and grassy dales between,
 'Midst forest dark of aged oak,
 Ne'er echoing with the woodman's stroke
 Where never human art appear'd,
 Nor e'en one straw-roof'd cot was rear'd,
 Where Nature seems to sit alone,
 Majestic on a craggy throne;
 Tell me the path, sweet wand'rer, tell,
 To thy unknown sequester'd cell,

Where

Where woodbines cluster round the door,
 Where shells and moss o'erlay the floor,
 And on whose top an hawthorn blows,
 Amid whose thickly-woven boughs
 Some nightingale still builds her nest,
 Each evening warbling thee to rest :
 Then lay me by the haunted stream,
 Rapt in some wild poetic dream,
 In converse while methinks I rove
 With Spenser thro' a fairy grove ;
 Till suddenly awak'd, I hear
 Strange whisper'd music in my ear,
 And my glad soul in bliss is drown'd,
 By the sweetly-soothing sound !

Me, Goddess, by the right-hand lead,
 Sometimes thro' the yellow mead,
 Where Joy and white rob'd Peace resort,
 And Venus keeps her festive court,
 Where Mirth and Youth each evening meet,
 And lightly trip with nimble feet.
 Nodding their lilly-crowned heads ;
 Where Laughter rose-lip'd Hebe leads ;
 Where Echo walks steep hills among,
 List'ning to the shepherd's song.

Yet not those flow'ry fields of joy
 Can long my pensive mind employ :
 Haste, Fancy, from these scenes of folly
 To meet the matron Melancholy,
 Goddess of the tearful eye,
 That loves to fold her arms and sigh
 Let us with silent footsteps go
 To charnels and the house of woe,
 To gothic churches, vaults and tombs,
 Where each sad night some Virgin comes,
 With throbbing breast, and faded cheek,
 Her promis'd bridegroom's urn to seek :
 Or to some Abbey's mould'ring tow'rs,
 Where to avoid cold winter's show'rs,
 The naked beggar shiv'ring lies,
 While whistling tempests round her rise,

And trembles lest the tottering wall
Should on her sleeping infants fall.

Now let us louder strike the lyre,
For my heart glows with martial fire,
I feel, I feel, with sudden heat,
My big tumultuous bosom beat,
The trumpets' clangors pierce mine ear,
A thousand widows' shrieks I hear,
Give me another horse, I cry,
Lo! the base Gallic squadrons fly;
Whence is this rage?—What spirit, say,
To battle hurries me away?

'Tis Fancy, in her fiery car,
Transports me to the thickest war,
There whirls me o'er the hills of slain,
Where Tumult and Destruction reign;
Where mad with pain, the wounded steed
Tramples the dying and the dead:
Where giant Terror stalks around,
With sullen joy surveys the ground,
And pointing to th' ensanguin'd field
Shakes his dreadful Gorgon-shield!

O guide me from this horrid scene
To high-arch'd walks and alleys green,
Which lovely Laura seeks to thun
The fervours of the mid-day sun;
The pangs of absence, O remove,
For thou canst place me near my love,
Canst fold in visionary bliss,
And let me think I steal a kiss.

When young-ey'd Spring profusely throws
From her green lap the pink and rose;
When the soft turtle of the dale
To Summer tells her tender tale,
When Autumn cooling caverns seeks
And stains with wine his jolly cheeks,
When Winter like poor pilgrim old,
Shakes his silver beard with cold,
At ev'ry season let my ear
Thy solemn whispers, Fancy, hear.

O warm, enthusiastic maid,
 Without thy pow'rful, vital aid,
 That breathes an energy divine,
 That gives a soul to ev'ry line ;
 Ne'er may I strive with lips profane
 To utter an unhallow'd strain,
 Nor dare to touch the sacred string
 Save when with smiles thou bid'st me sing.

O hear our prayer, O hither come
 From thy lamented Shakespear's tomb,
 On which thou lov'st to sit at eve,
 Musing o'er thy darling grave ;
 O queen of numbers, once again
 Animate some chosen swain,
 Who fill'd with unexhausted fire,
 May boldly strike the sounding lyre,
 May rise above the rhyming throng,
 And with some new unequall'd song
 O'er all our list'ning passions reign,
 O'erwhelm our souls with joy and pain :
 With terror shake, with pity move,
 Rouse with revenge, or melt with love.
 O deign t' attend his evening walk,
 With him in groves and grottos talk :
 Teach him to scorn with frigid art
 Feebly to touch th' unraptur'd heart ;
 Like lightning, let his mighty verse
 The bosom's inmost foldings pierce :
 With native beauties win applause,
 Beyond cold critics studied laws :
 O let each Muse's fame increase,
 O bid Britannia rival Greece !

C H A P. XVI.

L' A L L E G R O.

HENCE, loathed Melancholy,
 Of Cerberus, and blackest midnight born,
 In Stygian cave forlorn
 'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy
 Find out some uncouth cell,
 Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous wings,
 And the night raven sings ;
 There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,
 As ragged as thy locks,

In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.

But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
 In heav'n 'yclep'd Euphrosyne,
 And by men heart-easing Mirth,
 Whom lovely Venus at a birth
 With two sister Graces more
 To ivy-crowned Bacchus bore ;
 Or whether (as some fages sing)
 The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
 Zephyr with Aurora playing
 As he met her once a maying,
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh blown roses wash'd in dew,
 Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
 So buxsome, blithe, and debonair.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
 Jest and youthful jollity,
 Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
 Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles,
 Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
 And love to live in dimple sleek ;
 Sport that wrinkled care derides,
 And laughter holding both his sides.
 Come and trip it as you go
 On the light fantastic toe ;

And

And in thy right hand lead with thee
 The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty ;
 And if I give thee honour due,
 Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
 To live with her, and live with thee,
 In unreprieved pleasures free :
 To hear the lark begin his flight,
 And singing startle the dull night,
 From his watch-tower in the skies,
 Till the dappled dawn doth rise ;
 Then to come in spite of sorrow,
 And at my window bid good-morrow,
 Through the sweet briar or the vine,
 Or the twisted eglantine :
 While the cock with lively din
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
 And to the stack, or the barn door,
 Stoutly struts his dames before :
 Oft list'ning how the hounds and horn
 Clearly rouse the slumb'ring morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill,
 Through the high wood echoing shrill :
 Some time walking not unseen
 By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern gate,
 Where the great sun begins his state,
 Rob'd in flames, and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight :
 While the plow-man near at hand,
 Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,
 And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.

Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
 Whilst the landkip round it measures ;
 Ruffet lawns, and fallows gray,
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray :
 Mountains on whole barren breast
 The labouring clouds do often rest ;

Meadows trim with daisies pied ;
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide :
 Towers and battlements it sees
 Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 The Cynosure of neighbouring eyes.
 Hard by a cottage chimney smokes,
 From betwixt two aged oaks,
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis met,
 Are at their savoury dinner set
 Of herbs, and other country messes,
 Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses ;
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis to bind his sheaves ;
 Or if the earlier season lead
 To the tann'd haycock in the mead.

Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlet will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round,
 And the jocund rebecks sound
 To many a youth and many a maid,
 Dancing in the chequer'd shade ;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday,
 Till the live-long day-light fail ;
 Then to the spicy nut brown ale,
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How Fairy-Mab the junkets eat ;
 She was pincht, and pull'd, she said,
 And he by friars lanthorn led ;
 Tells how the drudging Goblin swet
 To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
 That ten day-labourers could not end,
 Then lies him down the lubbar fiend,
 And stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength ;
 And crop-full out of doors he flings
 Ere the first cock his matten rings.

Thus

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep.

Tow'rd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men,
Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With stores of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit or arms, while both contend
To win her grace, whom all commend.
There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe with taper clear,
And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
With mask, and antique pageantry.
Such sights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream.
Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Johnson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespear, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.

And ever against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
In notes with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out,
With wanton heed, and giddy cunning ;
The melting voice thro' mazes running ;
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of Harmony :
That Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber on a bed
Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regain'd Eurydice.

These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

C H A P. XVII.

II. P E N S E R O S O.

HENCE, vain deluding joys,
The brood of folly without father bred !
How little you bested.

Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys !
Dwell in some idle brain,
And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the sun-beams,
Or likest hovering dreams,

The fickle pensioners of Morpheus train.

But hail, thou Goddess, sage and holy,
Hail, divinest Melancholy,

Whose faintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight ;

And therefore to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue,

Black, but such as in esteem,
Prince Memnon's sister might beseem,

Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
To set her beauties praise above

The sea nymphs, and their powers offended :

Yet thou art higher far descended,

Thee bright-hair'd Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore ;

His daughter she (in Saturn's reign
Such mixture was not held a strain)

Oft in glimmering bowers, and glades

He met her, and in secret shades

Of woody Ida's inmost grove,

While yet there was no fear of Jove.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,

Sober, stedfast, and demure,

All in a robe of darkest grain,

Flowing with majestic train,

And

And sable stole of cypress lawn,
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn,
 Come, but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step, and musing gait,
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes :
 There held in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast,
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast.
 And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet,
 Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
 And hear the Muses in a ring,
 Ay round about Jove's altar sing.
 And add to these retired Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure ;
 But first, and chiefest, with thee bring,
 Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery wheeled throne,
 The Cherub Contemplation :
 And the mute silence hie along.
 'Less Philomel will deign a song,
 In her sweetest, saddest plight
 Smoothing the rugged brow of night,
 While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke,
 Gently o'er the accustom'd oak ;
 Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy ?
 Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among,
 I woo to hear thy ev'ning song :
 And missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heav'n's wide pathless way ;
 And oft as if her head she bow'd,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off Curfew sound,

Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with fullen roar.

Or if the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
Where glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom,
Far from all resort of mirth
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the belman's drowsy charm,
To bless the doors from nightly harm.

Or let my lamp at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tow'r
Where I may oft out-watch the Bear,
With thrice great Hermes, or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds, or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook :
And of those Dæmons that are found
In fire, air, flood, or under ground,
Whose power hath a true consent
With planet, or with element.

Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
In scepter'd pall come sweeping by,
Presenting Thebes, or Pelops line,
Or the tale of Troy divine,
Or what (though rare) of later age,
Ennobl'd hath the buskin'd stage.

But, O sad virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musæus from his bower,
Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek,
Or call up him that left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold,
Of Camball, and of Algarfise,
And who had Canace to wife,
That own'd the virtuous ring and glass,
And of the wondrous horse of brass,

On which the Tartar king did ride ;
 And if aught else, great bards beside,
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
 Of tourneys and of trophies hung ;
 Of forests, and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the ear.

Thus night oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till civil-suited morn appear,
 Not trick'd and flounc'd as she was wont,
 With the Attic boy to hunt,
 But kerchief'd in a comely cloud,
 While rocking winds are piping loud,
 Or usher'd with a shower still,
 When the gulf hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute drops from off the eaves.

And when the sun begins to sing
 His flaring beams, me, Goddess, bring
 To arched walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown that Sylvan loves
 Of pine or monumental oak,
 Where the rude ax with heaved stroke,
 Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
 Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt.
 There in close covert by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look,
 Hide me from day's garish eye,
 While the bee with honied thigh,
 That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring,
 With such concert as they keep,
 Entice the dewy-feather'd sleep:
 And let some strange mysterious dream,
 Wave at his wings in airy stream
 Of lively portraiture display'd,
 Softly on my eye-lids laid :
 And as I wake sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some spirit to mortals good,
 Or th' unseen Genius of the wood.

But let my due feet never fail
 To walk the studious cloysters pale,
 And love the high embowed roof,
 With antique pillars massy proof,
 And storied windows richly dight,
 Casting a dim religious light.
 There let the pealing organ blow,
 To the full voiced quire below,
 In service high, and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear
 Dissolve me into extasies,
 And bring all heav'n before mine eyes:

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell,
 Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
 And ev'ry herb that sips the dew :
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.

These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
 And I with thee will choose to live.

THE PROGRESS OF LIFE.

ALL the world's a stage,
 And all the men and women merely players;
 They have their exits and their entrances,
 And one man in his time plays many parts :
 His acts being seven ages. At first the infant,
 Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.
 And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel,
 And shining morning face, creeping like snail
 Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,
 Sighing like furnace, with a woful ballad
 Made to his mistress' eye-brow. Then the soldier
 Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,
 Jealous

Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel;
 Seeking the bubble reputation,
 Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice,
 In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
 With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
 Full of wise saws and modern instances,
 And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
 Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
 With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side;
 His youthful hose well saved; a world too wide
 For his thrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
 Turning again toward childish treble, pipes,
 And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
 That ends this strange eventful history,
 Is second childishness, and mere oblivion,
 Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

THE ENTRY OF BOLINGBROKE AND RICHARD INTO LONDON.

DUCH. MY Lord, you told me, you would tell
 the rest,

When weeping made you break the story off,
 Of our two cousins coming into London.

YORK. Where did I leave?

DUCH. At that sad stop, my Lord,
 Where rude misgovern'd hands, from window-tops,
 Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

YORK. Then, as I said, the Duke, great Bolingbroke,

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
 Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
 With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course;
 While all tongues cry'd, God save thee, Bolingbroke!
 You would have thought the very windows spake,
 So many greedy looks of young and old
 Through casements darted their desiring eyes

Upon

Upon his visage; and that all the walls
 With painted imag'ry had said at once,
 Jesus preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!
 Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,
 Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,
 Bespoke them thus: I thank you, countrymen;
 And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

DUCH. Alas! poor Richard, where rides he the while?

YORK. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,
 After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
 Are idly bent on him that enters next,
 Thinking his prattle to be tedious:
 Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
 Did scowl on Richard; no man cry'd, God save him!
 No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home:
 But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
 Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,
 (His face still combating with tears and smiles
 'The badges of his grief and patience)
 That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
 The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
 And barbarism itself have pitied him.
 But Heaven hath a hand in these events,
 To whose high will we bound our calm contents.

L I F E.

— R E A S O N thus with life:
 If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
 That none but fools would reck; a breath thou art,
 Servile to all the skiey influences,
 'That do this habitation, where thou keep'st,
 Hourly afflict: merely thou art death's fool;
 For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,
 And yet runn'st tow'rd him still. Thou art noble;
 For all th' accommodations, that thou bear'st,

Are

Are nurs'd by baseness : thou'rt by no means valiant;
 For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
 Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,
 And that thou oft provok'st; yet grossly fear'st
 Thy death, which is no more. Thou'rt not thyself;
 For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains,
 That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not;
 For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get;
 And what thou hast, forget'st. Thou art not certain;
 For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
 After the moon. If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
 For, like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloadeth thee. Friend thou hast none;
 For thy own bowels, which do call thee fire,
 The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
 Do curse the Gout, Serpigo, and the Rheum,
 For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth nor age;

But as it were an after dinner's sleep,
 Dreaming on both; for pall'd, thy blazed youth
 Becomes assuaged, and both beg the alms
 Of palsied Eld; and when thou'rt old and rich,
 Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor bounty,
 To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this
 That bears the name of life? yet in this life
 Lie hid more thousand deaths; yet death we fear,
 That makes these odds all even.

HOTSPUR'S DESCRIPTION OF A FOP.

I REMEMBER, when the fight was done,
 When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
 Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword;
 Came there a certain Lord, neat, trimly dress'd;
 Fresh as a bridegroom, and his chin, new reap'd,
 Shew'd like a stubble-land at harvest home.

He

He was perfumed like a milliner;
 And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
 A pouncet-box, which ever and anon
 He gave his nose; and took't away again;
 Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
 Took it in snuff.—And still he smil'd and talk'd;
 And as the soldiers bare dead bodies by,
 He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
 To bring a slovenly, unhandsome corse
 Betwixt the wind, and his nobility.
 With many holiday and lady terms
 He question'd me: amongst the rest demanded
 My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
 I then, all smarting with my wounds, being gall'd
 To be so pester'd with a popinjay,
 Out of my grief, and my impatience,
 Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what:
 He should, or should not; for he made me mad;
 To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
 And talk so like a waiting gentle-woman,
 Of guns, and drums, and wounds; (God save the mark!)
 And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
 Was parmacity, for an inward bruise;
 And that it was great pity, so it was,
 This villainous salt-petre should be digg'd
 Out of the bowels of the harmless earth
 Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd:
 So cowardly: and but for these vile guns,
 He would himself have been a soldier.

CLARENCE'S DREAM.

CLARENCE AND BRAKENBURY.

BRAK. WHY looks your grace so heavily to-day?

CLAR. O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days;
So full of dismal terror was the time.

BRAK. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you tell me.

CLAR. Methought that I had broken from the Tower,
And was imbark'd to cross to Burgundy,
And in my company my brother Glo'ster;
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches. Thence we look'd tow'rd England,
And cited up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster,
That had befall'n us. As we pass'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Glo'ster stumbled, and in falling
Struck me (that sought to slay him) over-board,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.

Lord, Lord, methought, what pain it was to drown!

What dreadful noise of water in my ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men, that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels.
Some lay in dead men's sculls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,

As

As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems;
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

BRAK. Had you such leisure in the time of death,
To gaze upon the secrets of the deep?

CLAR. Methought I had; and often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wandering air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

BRAK. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

CLAR. No, no; my dream was lengthen'd after life.

O then began the tempest to my soul:
I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger-soul;
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cry'd aloud—What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd. Then came wand'ring by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood, and he shriek'd out aloud——
Clarence is come, false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,
That stabb'd me in the field of Tewksbury;
Seize on him, furies, take him to your torments!—
With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Inviron'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling waked; and for a season after
Could not believe but what I was in hell:
Such terrible impression made my dream.

BRAK. No marvel, Lord, that it affrighted
you;

I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

CLAR. Ah! Brakenbury, I have done those things

That now give evidence against my soul,
For Edward's sake; and see how he requites me!

O God!

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
 But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
 Yet execute thy wrath on me alone;
 O spare my guiltless wife, and my poor children!
 I pr'ythee, Brakenbury, stay by me?
 My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

O THEN I see Queen Mab hath been with you.
 She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes
 In shape no bigger than an agate-stone
 On the fore-finger of an alderman;
 Drawn with a team of little atomies,
 Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:
 Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs;
 The cover of the wings of grasshoppers;
 The traces of the smallest spider's web;
 The collars of the moonshine's watery beams;
 Her whip of cricket's bone; the lash of film;
 Her waggoner a small gray-coated gnat.
 Not half so big as a round little worm,
 Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid.
 Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
 Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,
 Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers,
 And in this state she gallops; night by night,
 Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love:
 On courtiers' knees, that dream on courties' strait:
 O'er lawyers' fingers, who strait dream on fees:
 O'er ladies' lips, who strait on kisses dream;
 Sometimes she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
 And then dreams he of smelling out a suit:
 And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,
 Tickling the parson as he lies asleep;
 Then dreams he of another benefice.

Sometimes she driveth o'er a foldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep; and then anon
Drums in his ears, at which he starts and wakes;
And being thus frightened, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again.

I DO remember an apothecary,
And hereabouts he dwells, whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks;
Sharp Misery had worn him to the bones:
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes;
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of pack-thread, and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd to make up a show.
Noting his penury, to myself I said,
An' if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a caitiff wretch would sell it him.
Oh, this same thought did but fore-run my need,
And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house.
Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.

IF aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song,
May hope, chaste Eve, to sooth thy modest ear,
Like thy own solemn springs,
Thy springs, and dying gales,
O Nymph reserv'd, while now the bright-hair'd sun
Sits on yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts
With brede ethereal wove,
O'erhang his wavy bed :
Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-ey'd bat,
With short shrill shrieks flits on by leathern wing,
Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,
As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum.
Now teach me, maid compos'd,
To breathe some soften'd strain,
Whose numbers stealing through thy dark'ning vale,
May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
As musing slow, I hail
Thy genial lov'd return !
For when thy folding star arising shews
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant Hours, and Elves
Who slept in flow'rs the day,
And many a Nymph who wreathes her brows with fedge,
And sheds the fresh'ning dew, and lovelier still,
The pensive Pleasures sweet
Prepare thy shadowy car.
Then lead, calm Vot'ress, where some sheety lake
Cheers the lone heath, or some time-hallow'd pile,
Or up-land fallows grey
Reflect its last cool gleam.
But when chill blust'ring winds, or driving rain,
Forbid my willing feet, be mine the hut,

That

That from the mountain's side,
Views wilds, and swelling floods,
And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires,
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er all

Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.

While Spring shall pour his show'rs, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve!

While Summer loves to sport

Beneath thy ling'ring light;

While fallow Autumn fills thy lap with leaves;

Or Winter yelling through the troublous air,

Affrights thy shrinking train,

And rudely rends thy robes;

So long, sure-found beneath the Sylvan shed,

Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, rose-lip'd Health,

Thy gentlest influence own,

And hymn thy fav'rite name!

ODE TO SPRING.

SWEET daughter of a rough and stormy sire,
Hoar Winter's blooming child; delightful
Spring!

Whose unshorn locks with leaves
And swelling buds are crown'd;

From the green islands of eternal youth, (Crown'd with fresh blooms, and ever springing shade)

Turn, hither turn thy step,
O thou, whose powerful voice

More sweet than softest touch of Doric reed,
Or Lydian flute, can sooth the madding winds,
And thro' the stormy deep
Breathe thy own tender calm.

Thee,

Thee, best-belov'd ! the virgin train await
 With songs and festal rites, and joy to rove
 Thy blooming wilds among,
 And vales and dewy lawns,

With untir'd feet ; and cull thy earliest sweets
 To weave fresh garlands for the glowing brow
 Of him, the favour'd youth
 That prompts their whisper'd sigh.

Unlock thy copious stores ; those tender showers
 That drop their sweetness on the infant buds,
 And silent dews that swell
 The milky ear's green stem,

And feed the flowering osier's early shoots ;
 And call those winds which thro' the whispering boughs
 With warm and pleasant breath
 Salute the blowing flowers.

Now let me sit beneath the whitening thorn,
 And mark thy spreading tints steal o'er the dale ;
 And watch with patient eye
 Thy fair unfolding charms.

O Nymph, approach ! while yet the temperate sun
 With bashful forehead, thro' the cool moist air
 Throws his young maiden beams,
 And with chaste kisses woos

The earth's fair bosom ; while the streaming veil
 Of lucid clouds with kind and frequent shade
 Protects thy modest blooms
 From his severer blaze.

Sweet is thy reign, but short ; the red dog-star
 Shall scorch thy tresses, and the mower's scythe
 Thy greens, the flow'rets all,
 Remorseless shall destroy.

Reluctant

Reluctant shall I bid thee then farewell ;
 For O, not all that Autumn's lap contains,
 Nor Summer's ruddiest fruits,
 Can aught for thee atone,
 Fair Spring ! whose simplest promise more delights
 Than all their largest wealth, and thro' the heart
 Each joy and new-born hope
 With softest influence breathes.

C H A P. XXVII.

DOMESTIC LOVE AND HAPPINESS.

O HAPPY they ! the happiest of their kind !
 Whom gentler stars unite, and in one fate
 Their hearts, their fortunes and their beings blend.
 'Tis not the coarser tie of human laws,
 Unnatural oft, and foreign to the mind,
 That binds their peace, but harmony itself,
 Attuning all their passions into love ;
 Where friendship full-exerts her softest power,
 Perfect esteem enliven'd by desire
 Ineffable, and sympathy of soul ;
 Thought meting thought, and will preventing will,
 With boundless confidence : for nought but love
 Can answer love, and render bliss secure.
 Let him, ungenerous, who, alone intent
 To bless himself, from sordid parents buys
 The loathing virgin, in eternal care,
 Well-merited, consume his nights and days .
 Let barbarous nations, whose inhuman love
 Is wild desire, fierce as the suns they feel ;
 Let eastern tyrants from the light of Heaven
 Seclude their bosom-slaves, meanly possess'd
 Of a mere lifeless, violated form :
 While those whom love cements in holy faith,
 And equal transport, free as nature live,
 Disdaining fear. What is the world to them,

Its

Its pomp, its pleasure, and its nonsense all ?
 Who in each other clasp whatever fair
 High fancy forms, and lavish hearts can wish ;
 Something than beauty dearer, should they look
 Or on the mind, or mind-illumin'd face ;
 Truth, goodness, honour, harmony and love,
 The richest bounty of indulgent Heaven.
 Mean-time a smiling offspring rises round,
 And mingles both their graces. By degrees,
 The human blossom blows ; and every day,
 Soft as it rolls along, shews some new charm,
 The father's lustre, and the mother's bloom.
 Then infant reason grows apace, and calls
 For the kind hand of an assiduous care.
 Delightful task ! to rear the tender thought,
 To teach the young idea how to shoot,
 To pour the fresh instruction o'er the mind,
 To breathe th' enlivening spirit, and to fix
 The generous purpose in the glowing breast.
 Oh speak the joy ! ye, whom the sudden tear
 Surprises often, while you look around,
 And nothing strikes your eye but sights of bliss ;
 All various Nature pressing on the heart ;
 An elegant sufficiency, content,
 Retirement, rural quiet, friendship, books,
 Ease and alternate labour, useful life,
 Progressive virtue, and approving Heaven.
 These are the matchless joys of virtuous love ;
 And thus their moments fly. The Seasons thus,
 As ceaseless round a jarring world they roll,
 Still find them happy ; and consenting Spring
 Sheds her own rosy garland on their heads :
 Till evening comes at last, serene and mild ;
 When after the long vernal day of life,
 Enamour'd more, as more remembrance swells
 With many a proof of recollected love,
 Together down they sink in social sleep ;
 Together freed, their gentle spirits fly
 To scenes where love and bliss immortal reign.

THE PLEASURES OF RETIREMENT.

OKNEW he but his happiness, of men
 The happiest he ! who far from public rage,
 Deep in the vale, with a choice few retir'd,
 Drinks the pure pleasures of the rural life.
 What tho' the dome be wanting, whose proud gate,
 Each morning, vomits out the sneaking croud
 Of flatterers false, and in their turn abus'd ?
 Vile intercourse ! What tho' the glittering robe,
 Of every hue reflected light can give,
 Or floating loose, or stiff with mazy gold,
 The pride and gaze of fools ! oppress him not ?
 What tho', from utmost land and sea purvey'd,
 For him each rarer tributary life
 Bleeds not, and his insatiate table heaps
 With luxury, and death ? What tho' his bowl
 Flames not with costly juice ; nor sunk in beds,
 Oft of gay care, he tosses out the night,
 Or melts the thoughtless hours in idle state ?
 What tho' he knows not those fantastic joys,
 That still amuse the wanton, still deceive ;
 A face of pleasure, but a heart of pain :
 Their hollow moments undelighted all ?
 Sure peace is his ; a solid life, estrang'd
 To disappointment, and fallacious hope ;
 Rich in content, in Nature's bounty rich,
 In herbs and fruits ; whatever greens the Spring,
 When heaven descends in showers ; or bends the bough
 When Summer reddens. and when Autumn beams ;
 Or in the wintry glebe whatever lies
 Conceal'd, and fattens with the richest sap :
 These are not wanting ; nor the milky drove,
 Luxuriant, spread o'er all the lowing vale ;
 Nor bleating mountains ; nor the chide of streams,
 And hum of bees, inviting sleep sincere
 Into the guiltless breast, beneath the shade,

Or

Or thrown at large amid the fragrant hay;
 Nor aught besides of prospect, grove, or song,
 Dim grottoes, gleaming lakes, and fountain clear.
 Here too dwells simple truth; plain innocence;
 Unfulfilled beauty; sound unbroken youth,
 Patient of labour, with a little pleas'd;
 Health ever blooming; unambitious toil;
 Calm contemplation, and poetic ease.

The rage of nations, and the crush of states,
 Move not the man, who, from the world escap'd,
 In still retreats, and flowery solitudes,
 To Nature's voice attends, from month to month,
 And day to day, thro' the revolving year,
 Admiring, sees her in her every shape;
 Feels all her sweet emotions at his heart;
 Takes what she liberal gives, nor thinks of more.
 He, when young Spring protrudes the bursting gems,
 Marks the first bud, and sucks the healthful gale
 Into his freshened soul; her genial hours
 He full enjoys; and not a beauty blows,
 And not an opening blossom breathes in vain.
 In Summer he, beneath the living shade,
 Such as o'er frigid Tempe wont to wave,
 Or Hemus cool, reads what the Muse, of these
 Perhaps, has in immortal numbers sung;
 Or what she dictates writes; and oft an eye
 Shot round, rejoices in the vigorous year.
 When Autumn's yellow lustre gilds the world,
 And tempts the sickled swain into the field,
 Seiz'd by the general joy, his heart distends
 With gentle throws; and, thro' the tepid gleams
 Deep musing, then he best exerts his song.
 Even Winter wild to him is full of bliss.
 The mighty tempest, and the hoary waste,
 Abrupt, and deep, stretch'd o'er the buried earth,
 Awake to solemn thought. At night the skies,
 Disclos'd, and kindled, by refining frost,
 Pour every lustre on th' exalted eye.
 A friend, a book, the stealing hours secure,
 And mark them down for wisdom. With swift wing,

O'er land and sea th' imagination roams;
 Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
 Elates his being, and unfolds his powers;
 Or in his breast heroic virtue burns.
 The touch of kindred too and love he feels;
 The modest eye, whose beams on his alone
 Extatic shine; the little strong embrace
 Of prattling children, twin'd around his neck,
 And emulous to please him, calling forth
 The fond parental soul. Nor purpose gay,
 Amusement, dance, or song, he sternly scorns;
 For happiness and true philosophy
 Are of the social still, and smiling kind.
 This is the life which those who fret in guilt,
 And guilty cities, never knew; the life,
 Led by primeval ages, uncorrupt,
 When Angels dwelt, and God himself, with Man!

G E N I U S.

FROM heav'n my strains begin; from heav'n descends
 The flame of genius to the human breast,
 And love and beauty, and poetic joy
 And inspiration. Ere the radiant sun
 Sprang from the east, or 'mid the vault of night
 The moon suspended her serener lamp;
 Ere mountains, woods, or streams adorn'd the globe,
 Or wisdom taught the sons of men her lore;
 Then liv'd th' almighty ONE: then deep retir'd,
 In his unfathom'd essence, view'd the forms,
 The forms eternal of created things;
 The radiant sun, the moon's nocturnal lamp,
 The mountains, woods and streams, the rolling globe,
 And wisdom's mien celestial. From the first
 Of days, on them his love divine he fix'd,
 His admiration: till in time compleat,
 What he admir'd and lov'd, his vital smile

Unfolded

Unfolded into being. Hence the breath
 Of life informing each organic frame,
 Hence the green earth, and wild resounding waves;
 Hence light and shade alternate; warmth and cold;
 And clear autumnal skies and vernal show'rs,
 And all the fair variety of things.

But not alike to every mortal eye
 Is this great scene unveil'd. For since the claims
 Of social life, to different labours urge
 The active pow'rs of man; with wise intent
 The hand of nature on peculiar minds
 Imprints a different bias, and to each
 Decrees its province in the common toil.
 To some she taught the fabric of the sphere,
 The changeful moon, the circuit of the stars,
 The golden zones of heav'n: to some she gave
 To weigh the moment of eternal things,
 Of time, and space, and fate's unbroken chain,
 And will's quick impulse: others by the hand
 She led o'er vales and mountains, to explore
 What healing virtue swells the tender veins
 Of herbs and flow'rs; or what the beams of morn
 Draw forth, distilling from the clifted rind
 In balmy tears. But some to higher hopes
 Were destin'd; some within a finer mould
 She wrought, and temper'd with a purer flame.
 To these the fire omnipotent unfolds
 The world's harmonious volume, there to read
 The transcript of himself. On every part
 They trace the bright impressions of his hand:
 In earth or air, the meadow's purple stores,
 The moon's mild radiance, or the virgin's form
 Blooming with rosy smiles, they see pourtray'd
 That uncreated beauty, which delights
 The Mind supreme. They also feel her charms,
 Enamour'd; they partake th' eternal joy.

SAY, why was man so eminently rais'd
Amid the vast creation; why ordain'd
Thro' life and death to dart his piercing eye,
With thoughts beyond the limit of his frame;
But that th' Omnipotent might send him forth
In fight of mortal and immortal powers,
As on a boundless theatre, to run
The great career of justice; to exalt
His gen'rous aim to all diviner deeds;
To chase each partial purpose from his breast;
And thro' the mists of passion and of sense,
And thro' the tossing tide of chance and pain,
To hold his course unsalt'ring, while the voice
Of truth and virtue, up the steep ascent
Of nature, calls him to his high reward,
Th' applauding smile of Heav'n? Else wherefore burns

In mortal bosoms this unquenched hope,
That breathes from day to day sublimer things,
And mocks possession? Wherefore darts the mind,
With such resistless ardour to embrace
Majestic forms: impatient to be free,
Spurning the gross controul of wilful might;
Proud of the strong contention of her toils;
Proud to be daring? Who but rather turns
To Heav'n's broad fire his unconstrained view,
Than to the glimmering of a waxen flame?
Who that, from Alpine heights, his lab'ring eye
Shoots round the wide horizon, to survey
Nilus or Ganges rolling his bright wave
Thro' mountains, plains, thro' empires black with shade,

And continents of sand; will turn his gaze
To mark the windings of a scanty rill
That murmurs at his feet? The high-born soul
Disdains

Disdains to rest her heav'n aspiring wing
 Beneath its native quarry. Tir'd of earth
 And this diurnal scene, she springs aloft
 Thro' fields of air; pursues the flying storm;
 Rides on the volley'd lightning thro' the heav'ns;
 Or yok'd with whirlwinds and the northern blast,
 Sweeps the long tract of day. Then high she soars
 The blue profound, and hovering round the sun
 Beholds him pouring the redundant stream
 Of light; beholds his unrelenting sway
 Bend the reluctant planets to absolve
 The fated rounds of time. Thence far effus'd
 She darts her swiftness up the long career
 Of devious comets; thro' its burning signs
 Exulting measures the perennial wheel
 Of nature, and looks back on all the stars,
 Whose blended light, as with a milky zone,
 Invests the orient. Now amaz'd she views
 Th' empyreal waste, where happy spirits hold,
 Beyond this concave heav'n, their calm abode;
 And fields of radiance, whose unfading light
 Has travell'd the profound six thousand years,
 Nor yet arrives in sight of mortal things.
 Ev'n on the barriers of the world untir'd
 She meditates th' eternal depth below;
 Till, half recoiling, down the headlong steep
 She plunges; soon o'erwhelm'd and swallow'd up
 In that immense of being. There her hopes
 Rest at the fated goal. For from the birth
 Of mortal man, the sovereign Maker said,
 That not in humble nor in brief delight,
 Not in the fading echoes of renown,
 Pow'r's purple robes, nor pleasure's flow'ry lap,
 The soul should find enjoyment: but from these
 Turning disdainful to an equal good,
 Thro' all th' ascent of things enlarge her view,
 Till every bound at length should disappear,
 And infinite perfection close the scene.

N O V E L T Y.

CALL now to mind that high capacious pow'r
 Life folded up in man; how far beyond
 The praise of mortals, may th' eternal growth
 Of nature to perfection half divine,
 Expand the blooming soul. What pity then
 Should sloth's unkindly fogs depress to earth
 Her tender blossom; choak the streams of life,
 And blast her spring! Far otherwise design'd
 Almighty wisdom; nature's happy cares
 Th' obedient heart far otherwise incline.
 Witness the sprightly joy when aught unknown
 Strikes the quick sense, and wakes each active pow'r
 To brisker measures: witness the neglect
 Of all familiar prospects, tho' beheld.
 With transports once; the fond attentive gaze
 Of young astonishment; the sober zeal
 Of age, commenting on prodigious things.
 For such the bounteous providence of Heav'n,
 In every breast implanting this desire
 Of objects new and strange to urge us on
 With unremitted labour to pursue
 Those sacred stores that wait the ripening soul,
 In truth's exhaustless bosom. What needs words
 To paint its pow'r? For this, the daring youth
 Breaks from his weeping mother's anxious arms,
 In foreign climes to rove; the pensive sage
 Heedless of sleep, or midnight's harmful damp,
 Hangs o'er the sickly taper; and untir'd
 The virgin follows, with enchanted step,
 The mazes of some wise and wondrous tale,
 From morn to eve; unmindful of her form,
 Unmindful of the happy dress that stole
 The wishes of the youth, when every maid
 With envy pin'd. Hence finally by night

The village-matron, round the blazing hearth,
 Suspends the infant-audience with her tales,
 Breathing astonishment! of witching rhimes,
 And evil spirits; of the death-bed call
 Of him who robb'd the widow, and devour'd
 The orphan's portion; of unquiet souls
 Ris'n from the grave to ease the heavy guilt
 Of deeds in life conceal'd; of shapes that walk
 At dead of night, and clank their chains, and wave
 The torch of hell around the murd'rer's bed.
 At every solemn pause the croud recoil
 Gazing each other speechless, and congeal'd
 With shiv'ring sighs: till eager for th' event,
 Around the beldame all arrect they hang,
 Each trembling heart with grateful terrors quell'd.

A FEW hours before Yorick breathed his last, Eugenius stept in with an intent to take his last sight and last farewell of him. Upon his drawing Yorick's curtain, and asking how he felt himself, Yorick, looking up in his face, took hold of his hand,—and, after thanking him for the many tokens of his friendship to him, for which, he said, if it was their fate to meet hereafter, he would thank him again and again; he told him, he was within a few hours of giving his enemies the slip for ever.—I hope not, answered Eugenius, with tears trickling down his cheeks; and with the tenderest tone that ever man spoke,—I hope not, Yorick, said he.—Yorick replied, with a look up, and gentle squeeze of Eugenius's hand,—and that was all,—but it cut Eugenius to his heart.—Come, come, Yorick, quoth Eugenius, wiping his eyes, and summoning up the man within him,—my dear lad, be comforted,—let not all thy spirits and fortitude forsake thee at this crisis when thou most wantest them;—who knows what resources are in store. and what the power of God may yet do for thee?—Yorick laid his hand upon his heart, and gently shook his head;—for my part, continued Eugenius, crying bitterly as he uttered the words,—I declare I know not, Yorick, how to part with thee, and would gladly flatter my hopes, added Eugenius, chearing up his voice, that there is still enough left of thee to make a bishop,—and that I may live to see it.—I beseech thee, Eugenius, quoth Yorick, taking off his night-cap as well as he could with his left hand.—his right being still grasped close in that of Eugenius, —I beseech thee to take a view of my head.—I see nothing that ails it, replied Eugenius. Then, alas! my friend, said Yorick, let me tell you, that it is so bruised and mis-shapened with the blows which have been so unhand somely given me in the dark, that I might say with Sancho Panca, that should I recover, and “mitres thereupon be suffered “to rain down from heaven as thick as hail, not one “of them would fit it.”—Yorick’s last breath was hanging upon his trembling lips ready to depart as he uttered this;—yet still it was uttered with something of a Cervantic tone;—and as he spoke it, Eugenius could perceive a stream of lambent fire lighted up for a moment in his eyes;—faint picture of those flashes of his spirit which (as Shakespear said of his ancestor) were wont to set the table in a roar.

EUGENIUS was convinced from this, that the heart of his friend was broke; he squeezed his hand—and then walked softly out of the room, weeping as he walked. Yorick followed Eugenius with his eyes to the door,—he then closed them,—and never opened them more:

He lies buried in a corner of his church-yard, under a plain marble slab, which his friend Eugenius, by leave of his executors, laid upon his grave, with no more than these three words of inscription serving both for his epitaph, and elegy.

Alas, poor Y O R I C K !

TEN times a day has Yorick's ghost the consolation to hear his monumental inscription read over with such a variety of plaintive tones, as denote a general pity and esteem for him;—a footway crossing the church yard close by his grave,—not a passenger goes by without stopping to cast a look upon it—and sighing as he walks on,

Alas, poor Y O R I C K !

THE BEGGAR'S PETITION.

PITY the sorrows of a poor old man,
Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your door,

Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span,
Oh! give relief, and Heaven will bless your store.

These tatter'd cloaths my poverty bespeak,
These hoary locks proclaim my lengthen'd years;
And many a furrow in my grief-worn cheek
Has been the channel to a flood of tears.

Yon house, erected on the rising ground,
With tempting aspect drew me from my road;
For Plenty there a residence has found,
And Grandeur a magnificent above.

Hard is the fate of the infirm and poor!
Here, as I crav'd a morsel of their bread,
A pamper'd menial drove me from the door
To seek a shelter in an humbler shed.

Oh! take me to your hospitable dome;
Keen blows the wind, and piercing is the cold!
Short is my passage to the friendly tomb,
For I am poor and miserably old.

Should

Should I reveal the sources of my grief,
If soft humanity e'er touch'd your breast,
Your hands would not withhold the kind relief,
And tears of Pity would not be repress.

Heaven sends misfortunes; why should we repine?

'Tis Heaven has brought me to the state you see;
And your condition may be soon like mine,
The child of Sorrow, and of Misery.

A little farm was my paternal lot,
Then like the lark I sprightly hail'd the morn;
But ah! oppression forc'd me from my cot,
My cattle dy'd, and blighted was my corn.

My daughter, once the comfort of my age,
Lur'd by a villain from her native home,
Is cast abandon'd on the world's wide stage,
And doom'd in scanty Poverty to roam.

My tender wife, sweet soother of my care!
Struck with sad anguish at the stern decree,
Fell, ling'ring fell, a victim to despair,
And left the world to wretchedness and me.

Pity the sorrows of a poor old man,
Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your
door,
Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span.
Oh! give relief, and Heaven will bless your store.

C H A P. III.

ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF AN UNFORTUNATE LADY.

WHAT beck'ning ghost, along the moon-light
shade

Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade?
'Tis she!—but why that bleeding bosom gor'd,
Why dimly gleams the visionary sword?
Oh ever beauteous, ever friendly! tell,
Is it, in heav'n, a crime to love too well?
To bear too tender, or too firm a heart,
To act a Lover's or a Roman's part?
Is there no bright reversion in the sky,
For those who greatly think, or bravely die?

Why bade ye else, ye pow'rs! her soul aspire
Above the vulgar flight of low desire?
Ambition first sprang from your blest abodes;
The glorious fault of angels and of Gods:
Thence to their images on earth it flows,
And in the breasts of Kings and Heroes glows.
Most souls, 'tis true, but peep out once an age,
Dull sullen pris'ners in the body's cage.
Dim lights of life, that burn a length of years
Useless, unseen, as lamps in sepulchres;
Like Eastern Kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd to their own palace, sleep.

From these perhaps (ere nature bade her die)
Fate snatch'd her early to the pitying sky.
As into air the purer spirits flow,
And sep'rate from their kindred dregs below;
So flew the soul to its congenial place,
Nor left one virtue to redeem her race.

But thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou, mean deserter of thy brother's blood!
See on these ruby lips the trembling breath,
These cheeks, now fading at the blast of death;

Cold

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
 And those love-darting eyes must roll no more.
 Thus, if eternal justice rules the ball,
 Thus, shall your wives, and thus your children fall,
 On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
 And frequent heres shall besiege your gates,
 There passengers shall stand, and pointing say,
 (While the long fun'rals blacken all the way)
 Lo these were they, whose souls the Furies steel'd,
 And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield.
 Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
 The gaze of fools, and pageants of a day !
 So perish all, whose breast ne'er learn'd to glow
 For others good, or melt at others woe.

What can atone (oh ever injur'd shade !)
 Thy fate unpity'd, and thy rites unpaid !
 No friend's complaint, no kind domestic tear
 Pleas'd thy pale ghost, or grac'd thy mournful bier :
 By foreign hands thy dying eyes were clos'd,
 By foreign hands thy decent limbs compos'd,
 By foreign hands thy humble grave adorn'd,
 By strangers honour'd, and by strangers mourn'd !
 What tho' no friends in sable weeds appear,
 Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
 And bear about the mockery of woe
 To midnight dances, and the public show ?
 What tho' no weeping Loves thy ashes grace,
 Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face ?
 What tho' no sacred earth allow thee room,
 Nor hallow'd dirge be mutter'd o'er thy tomb ?
 Yet shall thy grave with humble flow'rs be dress'd,
 And the green turf lie lightly on thy breast :
 There shall the morn her earliest tears bestow,
 There the first roses of the year shall blow ;
 While angels with their silver wings o'ershade
 The ground, now sacred by thy reliques made.

So peaceful rests, without a stone, a name,
 What once had beauty, titles, wealth, and fame,
 How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not,
 To whom related, or by whom forgot ;

A heap

A heap of dust alone remains of thee,
 'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be !

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung,
 Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue.
 Ev'n he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays,
 Shall shortly want the gen'rous tear he pays ;
 Then from his closing eyes thy form shall part,
 And the last pang shall tear thee from his heart,
 Life's idle business at one gasp be o'er,
 The muse forgot, and thou be lov'd no more !

POPE.

C H A P. IV.

M O R N I N G H Y M N.

THESE are thy glorious works, Parent of good !
 Almighty ! thine this universal frame.

Thus wondrous fair ; thyself how wondrous then !
 Unspeakable ! who sit'st above these heav'ns,
 To us invisible, or dimly seen

In these thy lowliest works ; yet these declare
 Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.

Speak ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
 Angels ; for ye behold him, and with songs
 And choral symphonies, day without night,
 Circle his throne rejoicing ; ye in heav'n,

On earth join all ye creatures to extol
 Him first, him last, him midst, and without end.
 Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,

If better thou belong not to the dawn,
 Sure pledge of day, that crown'st the smiling morn
 With thy bright circlet, praise him in thy sphere,
 While day arises, that sweet hour of prime.

Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul,
 Acknowledge him thy greater ; sound his praise
 In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
 And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st.

Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st
 With

With the fix'd stars, fix'd in their orb that flies ;
 And ye five other wand'ring fires that move
 In mystic dance not without song, resound
 His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light,
 Air, and ye elements, the eldest birth
 Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run
 Perpetual circle, multiform, and mix,
 And nourish all things ; let your ceaseless change
 Vary to our great Maker still new praise.
 Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise
 From hill or streaming lake, dusky or gray,
 Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
 In honour to the world's great Author rise,
 Whether to deck with clouds th' uncolour'd sky,
 Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
 Rising or falling, still advance his praise.
 His praise, ye winds, that from four quarters blow,
 Breathe soft or loud ; and wave your tops, ye pines,
 With every plant in sign of worship wave.
 Fountains, and ye, that warble, as ye flow,
 Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.
 Join voices, all ye living souls ; ye birds,
 That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
 Bear on your wings and in your notes his praise.
 Ye that in waters glide, and ye that walk
 The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep ;
 Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
 To hill or valley, fountain or fresh shade,
 Made vocal, by my song, and taught his praise.
 Hail, universal Lord, be bounteous still
 To give us only good ; and if the night
 Have gather'd aught of evil, or conceal'd
 Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark.

MILTON.

C H A P. V.

S A T A N ' s S O L I L O Q U Y.

O THOU that, with surpassing glory crown'd,
 Look'st from thy sole dominion like the god
 Of this new World ; at whose sight all the stars
 Hide their diminish'd heads ; to thee I call,
 But with no friendly voice, and add thy name,
 O Sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams,
 That bring to my remembrance from what state
 I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere :
 Till pride, and worse ambition threw me down,
 Warring in heav'n against heaven's matchless King.
 Ah wherefore ? he deserv'd no such return
 From me, whom he created what I was,
 In that bright eminence, and with his good
 Upbraided none ; nor was his service hard.
 What could be less than to afford him praise,
 The easiest recompence, and pay him thanks,
 How due ! yet all his good prov'd ill in me,
 And wrought but malice : lifted up so high
 I 'sdain'd subjection, and thought one step higher
 Would set me high'st, and in a moment quit
 The debt immense of endless gratitude,
 So burdensome, still paying, still to owe :
 Forgetful what from him I still receiv'd ;
 And understood not that a grateful mind
 By owing owes not, but still pays, at once
 Indebted and discharged ; what burden then ?
 O had his pow'rful destiny ordain'd
 Me some inferior angel, I had stood
 Then happy ; no unbounded hope had rais'd
 Ambition. Yet why not ? some other power
 As great might have aspir'd, and me though mean
 Drawn to his part ; but other pow'rs as great Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
 Or from without, to all temptations arm'd.
 Hadst thou the same free will and pow'r to stand ?
Thou

'Thou hadst. Whom hast thou then, or what t' accuse,

But Heav'n's free love, dealt equally to all ?
Be then his love accurs'd, since love or hate,
To me alike, it deals eternal woe.

Nay curs'd be thou ; since against His thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues,
Me miserable ! which way shall I fly

Infinite wrath, and infinite despair ;
Which way I fly is hell ; myself am hell ;
And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep

Still threat'ning to devour me opens wide,
To which the hell I suffer seems a heaven.

O then at last relent : is there no place,
Left for repentance, none for pardon left ?
None left but by submission ; and that word

Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
Among the spirits beneath, whom I seduc'd
With other promises, and other vaunts,

Than to submit, boasting I could subdue
Th' omnipotent. Ah me, they little know
How dearly I abide that boast so vain,

Under what torments inwardly I groan,
While they adore me on the throne of hell :
With diadem and scepter high advance'd,
The lower still I fall, only supreme

In misery : such joy ambition finds.

But say I could repent, and could obtain,
By act of grace, my former state ; how soon
Would height recal high thoughts, how soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore ! ease would recant
Vows made in pain, as violent and void.

For never can true reconciliation grow
Where wounds of deadly hate have pierc'd so deep .
Which would but lead us to a worse relapse,
And heavier fall : so should I purchase dear
Short intermission bought with double smart.

'This knows my punisher : therefore as far
From granting he, as I from begging peace :
All hope excluded thus, behold in stead
Of us outcast, exil'd, his new delight,

Mankind created, and for him this world.
 So farewell hope, and with hope farewell fear,
 Farewell remembrance ; all good to me is lost ;
 Evil be thou my good : by thee at least
 Divided empire with heav'n's King I hold,
 By thee and more perhaps supreme will reign ;
 As man ere long, and this new world shall know.

MILTON.

C H A P. VI.

J U B A A N D S Y P H A X.

JUB. SYPHAX, I joy to meet thee thus alone.
 I have observ'd of late thy looks are fall'n.
 O'ercaft with gloomy cares and discontent ;
 Then tell me, Syphax, I conjure thee tell me,
 What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,
 And turn thine eye thus coldly on thy prince ?

SYPH. 'Tis not my talent to conceal my thoughts,
 Or carry smiles and sun-shine in my face,
 When discontent sits heavy at my heart :
 I have not yet so much the Roman in me.

JUB. Why dost thou cast out such ungen'rous terms
 Against the lords and sov'reigns of the world ?
 Dost thou not see mankind fall down before them,
 And own the force of their superior virtue ?
 Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric,
 Amidst our barren rocks, and burning sands,
 That does not tremble at the Roman name ?

SYPH. Gods ! where's the worth that sets this people up
 Above our own Numidia's tawny sons ?
 Do they with tougher sinews bend the bow ?
 Or flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
 Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm ?
 Who like our active African instructs
 The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand ?
 Or guides in troops th' embattled elephant,

Loaden

Loaden with war ? These, these are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome.

JUB. These all are virtues of a meaner rank,
Perfections that are plac'd in bones and nerves.

A Roman soul is bent on higher views :
To civilize the rude unpolish'd world,
To lay it under the restraint of laws ;
To make man mild, and sociable to man ;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and lib'ral arts,
Th' embellishments of life ; virtues like these,
Make human nature shine, reform the soul,
And break our fierce barbarians into men.

SYRH. Patience, just Heav'ns—Excuse an old man's warmth.

What are these wondrous civilizing arts,
This Roman polish, and this smooth behaviour,
That renders man thus tractable and tame ?
Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and sallies of the soul,
And break off all its commerce with the tongue ?
In short, to change us into other creatures,
Than what our nature and the gods design'd us ?

JUB. To strike thee dumb : turn up thy eyes to Cato !

There may'st thou see to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man.
While good, and just, and anxious for his friends,
He's still severely bent against himself ;
Renouncing sleep, and rest, and food, and ease,
He strives with thirst and hunger, toil and heat :
And when his fortune sets before him all
The pomps and pleasures that his soul can wish,
His rigid virtue will accept of none.

SYRH. Believe me, prince, there's not an African
That traverses our vast Numidian desarts,
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues.
Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase,
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst,

Toils

Toils all the day, and at th' approach of night
 On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
 Or rests his head upon a rock till morn :
 Then rises fresh, pursues his wonted game,
 And if the following day he chance to find
 A new repast, or an untasted spring,
 Blesses his stars, and thinks it luxury.

JUB. Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
 What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
 Nor how the hero differs from the brute.
 But grant that others could with equal glory
 Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense ;
 Where shall we find the man that bears affliction,
 Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato ?
 Heav'n's ! with what strength, what steadiness of mind,

He triumphs in the midst of all his sufferings !
 How does he rise against a load of woes,
 And thank the gods that throw the weight upon him !

SYPH. 'Tis pride, rank pride, and haughtiness of soul :

I think the Romans call it Stoicism.
 Had not your royal father thought so highly
 Of Roman virtue, and of Cato's cause,
 He had not fall'n by a slave's hand, inglorious :
 Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
 On Afric sands disfigur'd with their wounds,
 To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.

JUB. Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh ?
 My father's name brings tears into mine eyes.

SYPH. Oh, that you'd profit by your father's ills !

JUB. What would'st thou have me do !

SYPH. Abandon Cato.

JUB. Syphax, I should be more than twice an orphan
 By such a loss.

SYPH. Ay, there's the tie that binds you !
 You long to call him father. Marcia's charms
 Work in your heart unseen, and plead for Cato.
 No wonder you are deaf to all I say.

JUB.

JUB. Syphax, your zeal becomes importunate ;
I've hitherto permitted it to rave,
And talk at large ; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it.

SYPH. Sir, your great father never us'd me thus.
Alas, he's dead ! but can you e'er forget
The tender sorrows and the pangs of nature,
The fond embraces and repeated blessings,
Which you drew from him in your last farewell ?
Still must I cherish the dear, sad remembrance,
At once to torture, and to please my soul.

The good old King at parting wrung my hand,
(His eyes brim-full of tears) then sighing cry'd,
Pr'ythee be careful of my son ! — His grief
Swell'd up so high, he could not utter more.

JUB. Alas ! the story melts away my soul.
That best of fathers ! how shall I discharge
The gratitude and duty which I owe him ?

SYPH. By laying up his counsels in your heart.

JUB. His counsels bade me yield to thy directions :

Then, Syphax, chide me in severest terms,
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.

SYPH. Alas, my prince, I'd guide you to your safety.

JUB. I do believe thou wouldst ; but tell me how ?

SYPH. Fly from the fate that follows Cæsar's foes.

JUB. My father scorn'd to do it.

SYPH. And therefore dy'd.

JUB. Better to die ten thousand deaths,
Than wound my honour.

SYPH. Rather say your love.

JUB. Syphax, I've promis'd to preserve my temper ;

Why wilt thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal ?

SYPH. Believe me, prince, tho' hard to conquer
love,

'Tis easy to divert and break its force :
 Absence might cure it, or a second mistress
 Light up another flame, and put out this.
 The glowing dames of Zama's royal court
 Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms ;
 The sun that rolls his chariot o'er their heads,
 Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks :
 Were you with these, my prince, you'd soon forget
 The pale, unripen'd beauties of the North.

JUB. 'Tis not a set of features, or complexion,
 The tincture of the skin that I admire.
 Beauty soon grows familiar to the lover,
 Fades in his eye, and palls upon the sense.
 The virtuous Marcia tow'rs above her sex :
 True, she is fair (Oh, how divinely fair !)
 But still the lovely maid improves her charms,
 With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,
 And sanctity of manners. Cato's soul
 Shines out in ev'ry thing she acts or speaks,
 While winning mildness and attractive smiles
 Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
 Soften the rigour of her father's virtues.

SYRH. How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise !

CATO.

C H A P. VII.

C A T O ' s S O L I L O Q U Y.

IT must be so—Plato, thou reason'st well—
 Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
 This longing after immortality ?
 Or whence this secret dread and inward horror,
 Of falling into nought ? Why shrinks the soul
 Back on herself, and startles at destruction ?
 'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us ;
 'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
 And intimates eternity to man.
 Eternity ! thou pleasing, dreadful thought !

Thro'

Thro' what variety of untry'd being,
 Thro' what new scenes and changes must we pass!
 The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
 But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it.
 Here will I hold. If there's a Pow'r above us,
 (And that there is, all Nature cries aloud
 Thro' all her works) he must delight in virtue;
 And that which he delights in, must be happy.
 But when? or where?—This world was made for Cæsar.

I'm weary of conjectures—this must end 'em.

Thus am I doubly arm'd. My death and life,
 My bane and antidote are both before me.

This in a moment brings me to an end;

But this informs me I shall never die.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles

At the drawn dagger, and defies its point:

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself

Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years:

But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,

Unhurt amidst the war of elements,

The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds.

CATO.

C H A P. VIII.

SOUTHAMPTON AND ESSEX.

OFFICER. MY Lord,
 We bring an order for your execution,

And hope you are prepar'd; for you must die
 This very hour.

SOUTH. Indeed, the time is sudden!

Ess. Is death th' event of all my flatter'd hope?
 False sex! and Queen more perjur'd than them all?
 But die I will without the least complaint,
 My soul shall vanish silent as the dew
 Attracted by the sun from verdant fields,
 And leaves of weeping flowers. Come, my dear friend, Partner

Partner in fate, give me thy body in
 These faithful arms, and O now let me tell thee,
 And you, my Lords, and Heaven my witness too,
 I have no weight, no heaviness on my soul,
 But that I've lost my dearest friend his life.

SOUTH. And I protest by the same powers divine,
 And to the world ; 'tis all my happiness,
 The greatest bliss my mind yet e'er enjoy'd
 Since we must die, my Lord, to die together.

OFFICER. The Queen, my Lord Southampton, has been pleas'd

To grant particular mercy to your person ;
 And has by us sent a reprieve from death,
 With pardon of your treasons, and commands
 You to depart immediately from hence.

SOUTH. O my unguarded soul ! Sure never was
 A man with mercy wounded so before !

ESS. Then I am loose to steer my wand'ring voyage ;

Like a bad vessel that has long been crost,
 And bound by adverse winds, at last gets liberty,
 And joyfully makes all the sail she can,
 To reach its wish'd for port——Angels protect
 The Queen, for her my chiefest prayers shall be,
 That as in time she has spar'd my noble friend,
 And owns his crimes worth mercy, may she ne'er
 Think so of me too late when I am dead——
 Again, Southampton, let me hold thee fast,
 For 'tis my last embrace

SOUTH. O be less kind, my friend, or move less pity,
 Or I shall sink beneath the weight of sadness !
 I weep that I am doom'd to live without you,
 And should have smil'd to share the death of Essex.

ESS. O spare this tenderness for one that needs it,
 For her that I commit to thee, 'tis all that I
 Can claim of Southampton——O my wife !
 Methinks that very name should stop thy pity,
 And make thee covetous of all as lost
 That is not meant to her——be a kind friend
 To her, as we have been to one another ;

Name not the dying Essex to thy queen,
Lest it should cost a tear, nor e'er offend her.

SOUTH. O stay, my Lord, let me have one word more,

One last farewell, before the greedy axe
Shall part my friend, my only friend from me,
And Essex from himself—I know not what
Are call'd the pangs of death, but sure I am
I feel an agony that's worse than death—
Farewel.

Ess. Why that's well said——Farewel to thee——

Then let us part, just like two travellers,
Take distant paths, only this difference is,
Thine is the longest, mine the shortest way——
Now let me go——if there's a throne in heaven
For the most brave of men and best of friends,
I will bespeak it for Southampton.

SOUTH. And I, while I have life, will hoard thy memory:

When I am dead, we then shall meet again.

Ess. Till then, Farewel.

SOUTH. Till then, Farewel.

EARL OF ESSEX,

C H A P. IX.

J A F F I E R A N D P I E R R E.

JAFF. BY Heav'n, you stir not,
I must be heard, I must have leave to speak:

Thou hast disgrac'd me, Pierre, by a vile blow:
Had not a dagger done thee nobler justice?
But use me as thou wilt, thou can'st not wrong me,
For I am fallen beneath the basest injuries:
Yet look upon me with the eye of mercy,
With pity and with charity behold me;
Shut not thy heart against a friend's repentance;

O

But

But as there dwells a godlike nature in thee,
Listen with mildness to my supplications.

PIER. What whining monk art thou? what holy cheat,

That wouldst inroach upon my credulous ears,
And cant'st thus vilely? hence! I know thee not.

JAFF. Not know me, Pierre!

PIER. No, know thee not; what art thou?

JAFF. Jaffier, thy friend, thy once lov'd, valu'd friend!

Tho' now deservedly scorn'd, and us'd most hardly.

PIER. Thou Jaffier! thou my once lov'd, valu'd friend!

By heav'ns! thou ly'st; the man so call'd my friend,
Was generous, honest, faithful, just, and valiant,
Noble in mind, and in his person lovely,
Dear to my eyes, and tender to my heart:

But thou a wretched, base, false, worthless coward,
Poor even in soul, and loathsome in thy aspect:

All eyes must shun thee, and all hearts detest thee.
Prithee avoid, no longer cling thus round me,
Like something baneful, that my nature's chill'd at.

JAFF. I have not wrong'd thee, by these tears I have not,

But still am honest, true, and hope too, valiant;
My mind still full of thee, therefore still noble.

Let not thy eyes then shun me, nor thy heart
Detest me utterly: Oh! look upon me,

Look back and see my sad, sincere submission!
How my hearts swells, as e'en 'twould burst my bosom;

Fond of its goal, and labouring to be at thee;
What shall I do? what say to make thee hear me?

PIER. Hast thou not wrong'd me? dar'st thou call thyself

That once lov'd, valu'd friend of mine,
And swear thou hast not wrong'd me? Whence these chains?

Whence the vile death, which I may meet this moment?

Whence

Whence this dishonour, but from thee, thou false one?

JAFF. —All's true; yet grant one thing, and I've done asking.

PIER. What's that?

JAFF. To take thy life on such conditions
The council have propos'd: thou and thy friend
May yet live long, and to be better treated.

PIER. Life! ask my life! confess! record myself

A villain for the privilege to breathe,
And carry up and down this cursed city
A discontented and repining spirit,
Burdensome to itself, a few years longer,
To lose it, may be, at last, in a lewd quarrel
For some new friend; treacherous and false as thou art!

No, this vile world and I have long been jangling,
And cannot part on better terms than now,
When only men like thee are fit to live in't.

JAFF. By all that's just——

PIER. Swear by some other powers,
For thou hast broke that sacred oath too lately.

JAFF. Then by that hell I merit, I'll not leave thee,

Till to thyself at last thou'rt reconcil'd,
However thy resentment may deal with me.

PIER. Not leave me!

JAFF. No; thou shalt not force me from thee;
Use me reproachfully, and like a slave;
Tread on me, buffet me, heap wrongs on wrongs
On my poor head; I'll bear it all with patience;
I'll weary out thy most friendly cruelty;
Lie at thy feet and kiss 'em, tho' they spurn me,
Till wounded by my sufferings thou relent,
And raise me to thy arms with dear forgiveness.

PIER. Art thou not——

JAFF. What?

PIER. A traitor?

JAFF. Yes.

PIER. A villain?

JAFF. Granted.

PIER. A coward, a most scandalous coward,
Spiritless, void of honour, one who has sold
Thy everlasting fame for shameless life?

JAFF. All, all, and more, much more: my faults are numberless.

PIER. And would'st thou have me live on terms like thine?

'Base as thou'rt false——

JAFF. No; 'tis to me that's granted:
The safety of thy life was all I aim'd at,
In recompence for faith and trust so broken.

PIER. I scorn it more, because preserv'd by
thee;

And as when first my foolish heart took pity
On thy misfortunes, fought thee in thy miseries,
Reliev'd thy wants, and rais'd thee from thy state
Of wretchedness, in which thy fate had plung'd
thee,

To rank thee in my list of noble friends;
All I receiv'd, in surety for thy truth,
Were unregarded oaths, and this, this dagger,
Given with a worthless pledge thou since hast stol'n:
So I restore it back to thee again:
Swearing by all those powers which thou hast violated,

Never from this curs'd hour to hold communion,
Friendship or interest with thee, tho' our years
Were to exceed those limited the world.

Take it——Farewel, for now I owe thee nothing.

JAFF. Say thou wilt live then.

PIER. For my life, dispose of it
Just as thou wilt, because 'tis what I'm tir'd with.

JAFF. Oh Pierre!

PIER. No more.

JAFF. My eyes won't lose the sight of thee,
But languish after thine, and ake with gazing.

PIER. Leave me—Nay, then thus, thus I throw thee from me;

And curses great as is thy falsehood catch thee.

E D W A R D A N D W A R W I C K.

EDW. LET me have no intruders ; above all—
Keep Warwick from my sight——
Enter WARWICK.

WAR. Behold him here ;
No welcome guest, it seems, unless I ask
My lord of Suffolk's leave—there was a time
When Warwick wanted not his aid to gain
Admission here.

EDW. There was a time perhaps,
When Warwick more desir'd and more—deserv'd it.

WAR. Never ; I've been a foolish faithful slave ;
All my best years, the morning of my life,
Hath been devoted to your service : what
Are now the fruits ? Disgrace and infamy ;
My spotless name, which never yet the breath
Of calumny had tainted, made the mock
For foreign fools to carp at : but 'tis fit
Who trust in princes, should be thus rewarded.

EDW. I thought, my lord, I had full well repay'd

Your services with honours, wealth, and pow'r
Unlimited : thy all-directing hand
Guided in secret ev'ry latent wheel
Of government, and mov'd the whole machine :
Warwick was all in all, and pow'rless Edward
Stood like a cypher in the great account.

WAR. Who gave that cypher worth, and seated
thee.

On England's throne ? Thy undistinguish'd name
Had rotted in the dust from whence it sprang,
And moulder'd in Oblivion, had not Warwick
Dug from its sordid mine the useless ore,
And stamp'd it with a diadem. Thou know'st,
This wretched country, doom'd, perhaps, like Rome,
To fall by its own self-destroying hand,

Toft for fo many years in the rough fea
Of civil difcord, but for me had perifhed.
In that diftreffful hour I feiz'd the helm,
Bade the rough waves fubfide in peace, and fteer'd
Your fhat-ter'd vef-fel fafe into the harbour.

You may defpife perhaps that ufelefs aid
Which you no longer want; but know, proud
youth,

He who forgets a friend, deferves a foe.

EDW. Know too, reproach for benefits receiv'd
Pays ev'ry debt, and cancels obligation.

WAR. Why, that indeed is frugal honefty,
A thrifty faving knowledge, when the debt
Grows burthenfome, and cannot be discharg'd,
A fponge will wipe out all, and coft you nothing.

EDW. When you have counted o'er the numerous train

Of mighty gifts your bounty lavifh'd on me,
You may remember next the injuries
Which I have done you; let me know them all,
And I will make you ample fatisfaction.

WAR. Thou can'ft not; thou haft robb'd me of a jewel

It is not in thy power to reftore:
I was the firft, fhall future annals fay,
'That broke the facred bond of public tru-
And mutual confidence; ambaffadors,
In after times, mere inftruments perhaps,
Of venial ftatemen, fhall recal my name
'To witnefs, that they want not an example,
And plead my guilt to fanctify their own.

Amidft the herd of mercenary flaves
That haunt your court, cou'd none be found but Warwick,

'To be the fhamelefs herald of a lie?

EDW. And would'ft thou turn the vile reproach on me?

If I have broke my faith, and ftain'd the name
Of England, thank thy own pernicious counfels,
That urg'd me to it, and extorted from me
A cold confent to what my heart abhorr'd.

WAR.

WAR. I've been abus'd, insulted, and betray'd ;
My injur'd honour cries aloud for vengeance,
Her wounds will never close !

EDW. These gulls of passion,
Will but inflame them : if I have been right
Inform'd, my lord, besides these dang'rous scars
Of bleeding honour, you have other wounds
As deep, tho' not so fatal : such perhaps
As none but fair Elizabeth can cure.

WAR. Elizabeth !

EDW. Nay, start not, I have cause
To wonder most : I little thought indeed
When Warwick told me I might learn to love,
He was himself so able to instruct me :
But I've discover'd all.——

WAR. And so have I !
Too well I know thy breach of friendship there,
Thy fruitless base endeavours to supplant me.

EDW. I scorn it, sir,—Elizabeth hath charms,
And I have equal right with you to admire them ;
Nor see I aught so godlike in the form ;
So all-commanding in the name of Warwick,
That he alone should revel in the charms
Of beauty, and monopolize perfection,
I knew not of your love.

WAR. By Heav'n, 'tis false !
You knew it well, and meanly took occasion,
Whilst I was busy'd in the noble office,
Your grace thought fit to honour me withal,
To tamper with a weak unguarded woman,
To bribe her passions high, and basely steal
A treasure which your kingdom could not purchase.

EDW. How know you that ? But be it as it may,
I had a right, nor will I tamely yield
My claim to happiness ; the privilege,
To chose the partner of my throne and bed :
It is a branch of my prerogative.

WAR. Prerogative !—what's that ? the boast of tyrants :
A borrow'd jewel, glitt'ring in the crown

With specious lustre, lent but to betray,
You had it, sir, and hold it—from the people.

EDW. And therefore do I prize it; I wou'd guard

Their liberties, and they shall strengthen mine :
But when proud faction and her rebel crew
Insult their sov'reign, trample on his laws,
And bid defiance to his pow'r, the people
In justice to themselves, will then defend
His cause, and vindicate the rights they gave.

WAR. Go to your darling people then; for soon,
If I mistake not, 'twill be needful; try
Their boasted zeal, and see if one of them
Will dare to lift his arm up in your cause,
If I forbid them.

EDW. Is it so, my lord ?

Then mark my words : I've been your slave too long,

And you have rul'd me with a rod of iron,
But henceforth know, proud peer, I am my master,
And will be so : the king, who delegates
His pow'r to other's hands, but ill deserves
The crown he wears.

WAR. Look well then to your own ;
It sits but loosely on your head, for know,
The man who injur'd Warwick never pass'd
Unpunish'd yet.

EDW. Nor he who threaten'd Edward—
You may repent it, Sir,—my guards there—seize

This traitor, and convey him to the tow'r,
There let him learn obedience.

EARL OF WARWICK.

O R L A N D O A N D A D A M.

ORLA. WHO's there
 ADAM. What! my young master?
 Oh, gentle master,
 Oh my sweet master, O you memory
 Of old Sir Rowland! Why, what makes you here?
 Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you?
 And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
 Why would you be so fond to overcome
 The bony priser of the humorous Duke?
 Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
 Know you not, master, to some kind of men
 Their graces serve them but as enemies?
 No more do yours; your virtues, gentle master,
 Are sanctified and holy traytors to you.
 Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
 Ivenoms him that bears it!

ORLA. Why, what's the matter?

ADAM. O unhappy youth,
 Come not within these doors; within this roof
 The enemy of all your graces lives:
 Your brother——(no; no brother; yet the son,
 Yet not the son; I will not call him son
 Of him I was about to call his father),
 Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
 To burn the lodging where you us'd to lie,
 And you within it; if he fail of that,
 He will have other means to cut you off;
 I overheard him, and his practices:
 This is no place, this house is a butchery;
 Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it.

ORLA. Why, whither, Adam, would'st thou have me go?

ADAM. No matter whither, so you come not here.

ORLA. What would'st thou have me go and beg my food?

Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road?
This I must do, or know not what to do:
Yet this will not do, do how I can;
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood, and bloody brother.

ADAM. But do not so; I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father,
Which I did store, to be my foster-nurse
When service should in my old limbs lie lame,
And unregarded age in corners thrown:
Take that; and he that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age! here is the gold,
All this I give you, let me be your servant;
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood;
Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility;
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty, but kindly; let me go with you;
I'll do the service of a younger man
In all your business and necessities.

ORLA. Oh! good old man, how well in thee appears.

The constant service of the antique world;
When service sweat for duty, not for meed!
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat, but for promotion;
And having that, do choak their service up,
Even with the having; it is not so with thee;
But, poor old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come thy ways, we'll go along together;
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We'll light upon some settled low content.

ADAM,

ADAM. Master, go on; and I will follow thee
 To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty.
 From seventeen years till now, almost fourscore,
 Here lived I, but now live here no more.
 Ah seventeen years, many their fortunes seek;
 But at fourscore, it is too late a week;
 Yet fortune cannot recompense me better
 Than to die well, and not my master's debtor.

SCROOP AND RICHARD.

SCROOP. MORE health, and happiness betide
 my Liege,
 Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him!

K. RICH. Mine ear is open, and my heart pre-par'd;

The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold.
 Say is my kingdom lost? Why, 'twas my care;
 And what loss is it, to be rid of care?
 Strives Bolingbrooke to be as great as we?
 Greater he shall not be, if he serve God,
 We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so.
 Revolt our subjects? That we cannot mend;
 They break their faith to God, as well as us.
 Cry, woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;
 The worst is death, and death will have his day.

SCROOP. Glad am I that your Highness is so arm'd

To bear the tidings of calamity.
 Like an unseasonable stormy day,
 Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
 As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears;
 So high above his limits swells the rage
 Of Bolingbrooke, cov'ring your fearful land
 With hard bright steel, and hearts more hard than steel.

White beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
 Against

Against thy Majesty ; boys with women's voices
 Strive to speak big, and clasp their female joints
 In stiff unwieldy arms, against thy crown :
 Thy very beadsmen learn to bend their bows
 Of double-fatal yew, against thy state :
 Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills.
 Against thy seat both young and old rebel,
 And all goes worse than I have pow'r to tell.

K. RICH. Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so ill.

Where is the Earl of Wiltshire ? where is he got ?
 What is become of Bushy ? Where is Green ?
 —No matter where ; of comfort no man speak.
 Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs,
 Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
 Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth !
 Let's chuse executors, and talk of wills ;
 And yet not so——for what can we bequeath,
 Save our deposed bodies to the ground ?
 Our lands, our lives, and all, are Bolingbrooke's,
 And nothing can we call our own, but death ;
 And that small model of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
 For heav'n's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
 And tell sad stories of the death of Kings ;
 How some have been depos'd, some slain in war ;
 Some haunted by the ghosts they dispossest ;
 Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd ;
 All murder'd.——For within the hollow crown,
 That rounds the mortal temples of a King,
 Keeps Death his court ; and there the antic sits,
 Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp ;
 Allowing him a breath, a little scene
 To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks ;
 Infusing him with self and vain conceit,
 As if this flesh which walls about our life
 Were brass impregnable ; and, humour'd thus,
 Comes at the last, and with a little pin
 Bores through his castle walls, and farewell King !
 Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
 With solemn rev'rence : throw away respect,
 Tradition,

Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,
 For you have but mistook me all this while.
 I live on bread like you, feel want like you;
 Taste grief, need friends, like you: subjected thus,
 How can you say to me I am a King?

HOTSPUR AND GLENDOWER.

GLEND. SIT, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin
 Hotspur;

For, by that name, as oft as Lancaster
 Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale; and with
 A rising sigh, he wisheth you in heav'n.

HOT. And you in hell, as often as he hears
 Owen Glendower spoke of.

GLEND. I blame him not: at my nativity,
 The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
 Of burning creffets: know that, at my birth,
 The frame and the foundation of the earth
 Shook like a coward.

HOT. So it would have done
 At the same season if your mother's cat
 Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.

GLEND. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

HOT. I say, the earth then was not of my mind;
 If you suppose, as fearing you, it shook.

GLEND. The heav'ns were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

HOT. O, then the earth shook to see the heav'ns on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity.
 Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
 In strange eruptions; and the teeming earth
 Is with a kind of colic pinch'd and vex'd,
 By the imprisoning of unruly wind
 Within her womb; which for enlargement striving,
 Shakes

Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down
 High tow'rs and moss-grown steeples. At your birth,
 Our grandam earth, with this distemperature,
 In passion shook.

GLEND. Cousin, of many men
 I do not bear these crossings: give me leave
 To tell you once again, that at my birth
 The front of heav'n was full of fiery shapes;
 The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds
 Were strangely clam'rous in the frightened fields;
 These signs have mark'd me extraordinary,
 And all the courses of my life do shew;
 I am not in the roll of common men.
 Where is he living, clipt in with the sea
 That chides the banks of England, Wales, or Scotland,

Who calls me pupil, or hath read to me?
 And bring him out, that is but woman's son,
 Can trace me in the tedious ways of art,
 Or hold me pace in deep experiments.

HOT. I think there is no man speaks better Welch.

GLEND. I can speak English, Lord, as well as you,
 For I was train'd up in the English court:
 Where, being young, I framed to the harp,
 Many an English ditty, lovely well,
 And gave the tongue a helpful ornament;
 A virtue that was never seen in you.

HOT. Marry, and I'm glad of it with all my heart,

I had rather been a kitten, and cry Mew!
 Than one of these same metre-ballad mongers;
 I'd rather hear a brazen candlestick tun'd,
 Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree,
 And that would nothing set my teeth on edge,
 Nothing so much as mincing poetry;
 'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.——

GLEND. I can call spirits from the vatty deep.

HOT. Why, so can I, or so can any man:
 But will they come when you do call them?

GLEND. Why, I can teach thee to command the devil.

HOT.

HOT. And I can teach thee, coz. to shame the devil,

By telling truth; Tell truth and shame the devil.—

If thou hast pow'r to raise him, bring him hither;
And I'll be sworn, I've pow'r to shame him hence.
Oh, while you live, Tell truth and shame the devil.

CHAP. XIV.

HOTSPUR READING A LETTER.

“BUT for mine own part, my Lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.” He could be contented to be there; why is he not then? “In respect of the love he bears our house!” He shews in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. “The purpose you undertake is dangerous.” Why, that is certain: it is dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink: but I tell you, Lord fool, out of this nettle danger, we pluck this flower safety. “The purpose you undertake is dangerous, the friends you have named uncertain, the time itself unforted, and your whole plot too light, for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.” Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation; an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue this is? Why, my Lord of York commends the plot, and the general course of the action. By this hand, if I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his Lady’s fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself, Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the

the ninth of the next month? and are there not some of them set forward already? What a Pagan rascal is this? an infidel. Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the King, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Hang him, let him tell the King. We are prepared, I will set forward to-night.

HENRY IV.'s SOLILOQUY ON SLEEP.

HOW many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O gentle Sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more will weigh my eye-lids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Why rather, Sleep, ly'st thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
O thou dull god, why ly'st thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch,
A watch-case to a common larum-bell?
Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast,
Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains,
In cradle of the rude imperious surge;
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
With deafning clamours in the slippery shrouds,
That, with the hurly, death itself awakes:
Can'st thou, O partial Sleep, give thy repose
To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,

With

With all appliances and means to boot,
 Deny it to a king? Then, happy low! lie down;
 Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XVI.

HENRY IV. AND PRINCE HENRY.

P. HENRY. I NEVER thought to hear you speak again.

K. HENRY. Thy wish was rather, Harry, to that thought.

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
 Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
 That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
 Before thy hour be ripe! O foolish youth!
 Thou seek'st the greatness that will o'erwhelm thee.
 Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
 Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
 That it will quickly drop; my day is dim.
 Thou hast stol'n that, which after some few hours,
 Were thine without offence; and at my death,
 Thou hast sealed up my expectation;
 Thy life did manifest, thou lov'dst me not;
 And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.
 Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
 Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
 To stab at half an hour of my frail life.
 What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
 Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
 And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
 That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
 Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse,
 Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head;
 Only compound me with forgotten dust,
 Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.
 Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
 For now a time is come to mock at form;
 Henry the Fifth is crown'd: up, Vanity!

Down,

Down, Royal state! All you sage counsellors, hence!
 And to the English court assemble now;
 From ev'ry region apes of idleness:
 Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum;
 Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance?
 Revel the night? rob? murder? and commit
 The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
 Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
 England shall give him office, honour, might:
 For the Fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
 The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
 Shall flesh his tooth on every innocent:
 O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
 When that my care could not with-hold thy riots,
 What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
 O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
 Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.

P. HENRY. O pardon me, my Liege! but for my tears,
 (The moist impediments unto my speech)
 I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
 Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
 The course of it so far. There is your crown;
 And he that wears the crown immortally,
 Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
 Than as your honour, and as your renown,
 Let me no more from this obedience rise,
 Which my most true and inward-duteous spirit
 Teacheth this prostrate and exterior bending.
 Heav'n witness with me, when I here came in,
 And found no course of breath within your Majesty,
 How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
 O let me in my present wildness die,
 And never live to shew th' incredulous world
 The noble change that I have purposed.
 Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
 (And dead almost, my Liege, to think you were)
 I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
 And thus upbraided it. The care on thee depending
 Hath fed upon the body of my father,

Therefore

Therefore thou best of gold art worst of gold ;
 Other, less fine in carrat, is more precious,
 Preserving life in med'cine potable :
 But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
 Hast eat thy bearer up. Thus, royal Liege,
 Accusing it, I put it on my head,
 To try with it (as with an enemy,
 That had before my face murder'd my father)
 The quarrel of a true inheritor.
 But if it did infect my blood with joy,
 Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride,
 If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
 Did with the least affection of a welcome
 Give entertainment to the might of it ;
 Let Heav'n for ever keep it from my head,
 And make me as the poorest vassal is,
 That doth with awe and terror kneel to it !

K. HENRY. O my son !

Heav'n put it in thy mind to take it hence,
 That thou might'st win the more thy father's love,
 Pleading so wisely in excuse of it,
 Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed ;
 And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
 That ever I shall breathe. Heav'n knows, my son,
 By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways
 I met this crown ; and I myself knew well,
 How troublesome it sat upon my head.
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
 Better opinion, better confirmation ;
 For all the toil of the achievement goes
 With me into the earth. It seem'd in me
 But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
 And I had many living to upbraid
 My gain of it by their assistances ;
 Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed,
 Wounding supposed peace. All their bold feats,
 Thou see'st, with peril I have answered.
 For all my reign hath been but as a scene
 Acting that argument : and now my death
 Changes the mode ; for what in me was purchas'd,
 Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort ;

For thou the garland wear'st successively,
 Yet tho' thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
 Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green ;
 And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,

Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out ;
 By whose fell working I was first advanced,
 And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear,
 To be again displac'd ; which to avoid
 I cut them off, and had a purpose now
 To lead out many to the holy land ;
 Lest rest and lying still might make them look Too near into my state. Therefore, my Harry,
 Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
 With foreign quarrels ; that action, hence, borne out

May waste the memory of former days.
 More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
 That strength of speech is utterly deny'd me.
 How I came to the Crown, O God, forgive !
 And grant it may with thee in true peace live !

P. HENRY. My gracious Liege,
 You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me ;
 Then plain and right must my possession be ;
 Which I with more than with a common pain,
 'Gainst all the world, will rightfully maintain.

SHAKESPEARE.

C H A P. XVII.

HENRY V. TO HIS SOLDIERS.

WHAT's he that wishes for more men from England ?

My cousin Westmoreland ? No, my fair cousin,
 If we are mark'd to die, we are enow
 To do our country loss ; and if to live,
 The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
 God's will ! I pray thee wish not one man more.
 By Jove, I am not covetous of gold ;

Not

Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost ;
 It yearns me not if men my garments wear ;
 Such outward things dwell not in my desires :
 But if it be a sin to covet honour,
 I am the most offending soul alive.
 No, 'faith my Lord, wish not a man from England :
 God's peace, I would not lose so great an honour,
 As one man more, methinks, would share from me,
 For the best hopes I have. Don't wish one more :
 Rather proclaim it (Westmoreland) through my host,
 That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
 Let him depart ; his passport shall be made,
 And crowns for convoy put into his purse :
 We would not die in that man's company,
 That fears his fellowship to die with us.
 This day is call'd the feast of Crispian :
 He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
 Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
 And rouse him at the name of Crispian :
 He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
 Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
 And say, To morrow is Saint Crispian :
 Then will he strip his sleeves and shew his scars.
 Old men forget : yet shall not all forget,
 But they'll remember, with advantages,
 The feats they did that day. Then shall our names,
 Familiar in their mouths as household-words,
 Harry the King, Bedford, and Exeter,
 Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Glo'ster,
 Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
 This story shall the good man teach his son ;
 And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
 From this day to the ending of the world,
 But we in it shall be remembered ;
 We few, we happy few, we band of brothers :
 For he to-day that sheds his blood with me,
 Shall be my brother ; be he e'er so vile,
 This day shall gentle his condition.
 And gentlemen in England, now a-bed,
 Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here ;
 And

And hold their manhoods cheap, while any speaks,
That fought with us upon St. Crispian's day.

HENRY VI. AND CARDINAL BEAUFORT.

K. HENRY. HOW fares my lord? Speak, Beaufort, to thy Sovereign.

CAR. If thou be'st Death, I'll give thee England's treasure,

Enough to purchase such another island,
So thou wilt let me live and feel no pain.

K. HENRY. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
Where death's approach is seen so terrible!

CAR. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
Dy'd he not in his bed? Where should he die?
Can I make men live whether they will or no?
Oh! torture me no more, I will confess——

Alive again? Then shew me where he is:

I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him——

He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them:

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.

Give me some drink, and bid th' apothecary

Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

K. HENRY. O thou eternal Mover of the heav'ns,

Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch;

Oh, beat away the busy, meddling fiend,

That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,

And from his bosom purge this black despair.

—Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!

Lord Cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,

Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.

He dies, and makes no sign? O God, forgive him.

WOLSEY AND CROMWELL.

WOL. SO farewell to the little good you bear me
Farewel, a long farewell to all my greatness!

This is the state of man : To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes ; to morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him :
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a-ripening, nips his shoot ;
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory ;
But far beyond my depth ; my high-blown pride
At length broke under me ; and now has left me,
Weary and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Vain pomp and glory of the world, I hate ye !
I feel my heart new open'd. Oh, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favours !
There is, betwixt that smile he would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and his ruin,
More pangs and fears than war or women have ;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.

Why, how now, Cromwell ?

CROM. I have no power to speak, Sir.

WOL. What, amaz'd

At my misfortunes ? Can thy spirit wonder
A great man should decline ? Nay, if you weep,
I'm fallen indeed.

CROM. How does your Grace ?

WOL. Why, well ;

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.

I know myself now, and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities ;

A still

A still and quiet conscience. The King has cur'd me,

I humbly thank his Grace ; and, from these shoulders,

These ruin'd pillars, out of pity taken
A load would sink a navy, too much honour.

O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden,

Too heavy for a man that hopes for heav'n !

CROM. I'm glad your Grace has made that right use of it,

WOL. I hope I have : I'm able now methinks,
Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,

T' endure more miseries, and greater far,

Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.

What news abroad ?

CROM. The heaviest and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the King.

WOL. God bless him !

CROM. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen

Lord Chancellor in your place.

WOL. That's somewhat sudden——

But he's a learned man. May he continue

Long in his Highness' favour, and do justice

For truth's sake and his conscience ; that his bones,

When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings,

May have a tomb of orphans' tears wept on him !

What more !

CROM. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome ;

Install'd Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

WOL. That's news indeed.

CROM. Last, that the lady Anne,

Whom the King hath in secrecy long married,

This day was view'd in open as his Queen,

Going to chapel ; and the voice is now

Only about her coronation.

WOL. There was the weight that pull'd me down. O Cromwell,

The king has gone beyond me ; all my glories

In that one woman I have lost for ever.

No sun shall ever usher forth my honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell;

I am a poor fall'n man, unworthy now
To be thy lord and master. Seek the King,
(That sun I pray may never set) I've told him
What and how true thou art; he will advance thee;
Some little memory of me will stir him,
(I know his noble nature) not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too. Good Cromwell,
Neglect him not; make use now and provide
For thine own future safety.

CROM. O my Lord,
Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master?
Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his Lord.
The King shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

WOL. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries, but thou hast forc'd me,
Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman——
Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Crom-
well,

And when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard, say then I taught thee:
Say, Wolsey, that once rode the waves of glory,
And sounded all the depth and shoals of honour,
Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in:
A sure and safe one, though thy master mis'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that which ruin'd me:
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels; how can man then (Tho' th' image of his Maker) hope to win by't?
Love thyself last; cherish those hearts that wait
thee!

Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not.

Let all the ends thou aim'st at, be thy Country's,
Thy God's and Truth's; then if thou fall'st, O
Cromwell,

Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the King——
And pr'ythee lead me in——

There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny, 'tis the King's. My robe,
And my integrity to Heav'n, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell,
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my King, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.

CROM. Good Sir, have patience.

WOL. So I have. Farewel
The hopes of court! My hopes in heaven do dwell.

L E A R.

BLOW winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!

You cataracts, and hurricanes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

You sulph'rous and thought-executing fires,
Singe my white head. And thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world;
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ungrateful man!

Rumble thy belly full, spit fire, spout rain!
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters,
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdoms, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription. Then let fall
Your horrible pleasure.——Here I stand your brave;

A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man!

But

But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Oh! oh! 'tis foul.

Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,

That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice! Hide thee, thou bloody hand;

Thou perjure, and thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous! caitiff, shake to pieces,
That, under cover of convivial seeming,
Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close-pent up guilt,

Rive your concealing continents, and ask
Those dreadful summoners grace!—I am a man,

More sinn'd against, than sinning.

MACBETH'S SOLILOQUY.

IS this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand? come, let me clutch
thee.—

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind; a false creation
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.—

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going;
And such an instrument I was to use.
Mine eyes are made the fools o' th' other senses,
Or else worth all the rest—I see thee still;

And on the blade of th' dudgeon, gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. There's no such thing.—
It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er one half the world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain'd sleep; now witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecate's offerings: and wither'd Murther, (Alarum'd by his centinel, the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch) thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, tow'rd his design
Moves like a ghost.—Thou found and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
The very stones prate of my where-about;
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it.—Whilst I threat, he lives——

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.—
I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell.

MACDUFF, MALCOLM, AND ROSSE.

MACD. SEE who comes here!

MAL. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

MACD. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

MAL. I know him now. Good God, betimes remove

The means that makes us strangers!

ROSSE. Sir, Amen.

MACD. Stands Scotland where it did?

ROSSE. Alas, poor country,
Almost afraid to know itself. It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave; where nothing

But

But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy; the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom: and good mens'
lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps;
Dying or e'er they sicken.

MACD. Oh, relation

Too nice, and yet too true!

MAL. What's the newest grief?

ROSSE. That of an hour's age doth kiss the speaker,

Each minute teems a new one,

MACD. How does my wife?

ROSSE. Why, well.—

MACD. And all my children?

ROSSE. Well too.—

MACD. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

ROSSE. No; they were at peace when I did leave 'em.

MACD. Be not a niggard of your speech: how goes it?

ROSSE. When I came hither to transport the tidings,

Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out,
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot.
Now is the time of help; your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make woman fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

MAL. Be't their comfort

We're coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward and ten thousand men;
An older and a better soldier, none
That Christendom gives out.

ROSSE. Would I could answer

This comfort with the like: But I have words

That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them.

MACD. What concern they?
The gen'ral cause? or is it a free-grief
Due to some single breast?

ROSSE. No mind that's honest,
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

MACD. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

ROSSE. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound,
That ever yet they heard.

MACD. Hum! I guess at it.

ROSSE. Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were on the quarry of these murder'd deer
To add the death of you.

MAL. Merciful Heav'n!
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows,
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.

MACD. My children too!——

ROSSE. Wife, children, servants, all that could be found.

MACD. And I must be from thence! my wife kill'd too!

ROSSE. I've said.

MAL. Be comforted.
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

MACD. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?
Did you say, all? what, all! oh, hell-kite! all?

MAL. Endure it like a man.

MACD. I shall do so;
But I must also feel it as a man.
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Did Heav'n look on,
And would not take their part? sinful Macduff,

They

They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Heav'n rest them now!

MAL. Be this the whet-stone of your sword, let grief

Convert to wrath: blunt not the heart, enrage it.

MACD. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,

And baggart with my tongue. But, gentle Heav'n!
Cut short all intermission: front to front,
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland and myself;
Within my sword's length set him, if he 'scape,
Then heav'n forgive him too!

MAL. This tune goes manly.

Come, go we to the King, our pow'r is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;

The night is long that never finds the day.

ANTONY'S SOLILOQUY OVER CÆSAR'S BODY.

O PARDON me, thou bleeding piece of earth!
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
(Which like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue,)
A curse shall light upon the line of men;
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,

And dreadful objects so familiar,
 That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
 Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war :
 All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds ;
 And Cæsar's spirit, raging for revenge,
 With Atë by his side, come hot from hell,
 Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
 Cry Havock, and let slip the dogs of war.

SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XXIII.

ANTONY'S FUNERAL ORATION OVER
CÆSAR'S BODY.

FRRIENDS, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears.

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.
 The evil that men do lives after them;
 The good is oft interred with their bones;
 So let it be with Cæsar ! Noble Brutus
 Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious;
 If it were so, it was a grievous fault;
 And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.
 Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
 (For Brutus is an honourable man,
 So are they all, all honourable men)
 Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.
 He was my friend, faithful and just to me;
 But Brutus says, he was ambitious;
 And Brutus is an honourable man,
 He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
 Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill;
 Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious ?
 When that the poor hath cry'd, Cæsar hath wept;
 Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.
 Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
 And Brutus is an honourable man.
 You all did see, that on the Lupercal,
 I thrice presented him a kingly crown;

Which

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?
 Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
 And, sure, he is an honourable man.
 I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
 But here I am to speak what I do know.
 You all did love him once, not without cause.
 What cause with-holds you then to mourn for him?
 O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
 And men have lost their reason—Bear with me.—
 My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,
 And I must pause till it come back to me.

If you have tears prepare to shed them now.
 You all do know this mantle; I remember,
 The first time ever Cæsar put it on,
 'Twas on a summer's evening in his tent,
 That day he overcame the Nervii——
 Look! in this place ran Cassius' dagger through;—
 See what a rent the envious Casca made.—
 Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd:
 And as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
 Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it!
 As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd,
 If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no:
 For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel.
 Judge, oh you gods! how dearly Cæsar lov'd him;
 This, this was the unkindest cut of all;
 For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
 Ingratitude more strong than traitor's arms,
 Quite vanquish'd him; then burst his mighty heart:
 And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
 Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell,
 Even at the base of Pompey's statue.
 O what a fall was there, my countrymen!
 Then I and you, and all of us fell down,
 Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
 O, now you weep; and I perceive you feel
 The dint of pity; these are gracious drops.
 Kind souls! what, weep you when you but behold
 Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? look you here!
 Here is himself, marr'd as you see by traitors.—

Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up
 To any sudden flood of mutiny.
 They that have done this deed are honourable;
 What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
 That made them do it; they are wise and honourable;
 And will, no doubt, with reason answer you:
 I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;
 I am no orator, as Brutus is:
 But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
 That love my friend; and that they know full well
 That give me public leave to speak of him:
 For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
 Action nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
 To stir men's blood; I only speak right on.
 I tell you that which you yourselves do know;
 Shew you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor poor dumb mouths:
 And bid them speak for me. But were I Brutus,
 And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
 In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
 The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XXIV.

THE QUARREL OF BRUTUS AND CASSIUS.

CAS. THAT you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this,
 You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
 For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
 Wherein my letter (praying on his side,
 Because I knew the man) was slighted of.

BRU. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.

CAS. In such a time as this, it is not meet
 That ev'ry nice offence should bear its comment.

BRU.

BRU. Yet let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemned to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold,
To undeservers.

CAS. I an itching palm?
You know, that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

BRU. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,
And chastisement doth therefore hide its head.

CAS. Chastisement!——

BRU. Remember March, the ides of March remember!

Did not great Julius bleed for justice sake?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice? What, shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man of all this world,
But for supporting robbers; shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?
And sell the mighty meed of our large honours
For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman.

CAS. Brutus, bay not me,
I'll not endure it; you forget yourself,
To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.

BRU. Go to; you are not, Cassius.

CAS. I am.

BRU. I say, you are not.

CAS. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself——

Have mind upon your health—tempt me no further.

BRU. Away, slight man!

CAS. Is't possible?

BRU. Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frightened when a madman stares?

CAS. O gods! ye gods! must I endure all this?

BRU.

BRU. All this? ay more. Fret till your proud heart break;

And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge! Must I observe you? must I stand and crouch Under your testy humour? By the gods, You shall digest the venom of your spleen, Tho' it do split you: for, from this day forth, I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter, When you are waspish.

CAS. Is it come to this?

BRU. You say, you are a better soldier; Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well. For mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

CAS. You wrong me every way—you wrong me, Brutus;

I said, an older soldier; not a better.

Did I say better?

BRU. If you did, I care not.

CAS. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.

BRU. Peace, peace you durst not so have tempted him.

CAS. I durst not!

BRU. No.

CAS. What? durst not tempt him?

BRU. For your life you durst not.

CAS. Do not presume too much upon my love; I may do what I shall be sorry for.

BRU. You have done that you should be sorry for. There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats; For I am arm'd so strong in honesty, That they pass by me as the idle wind, Which I respect not. I did send to you For certain sums of gold, which you deny'd me; For I can raise no money by vile means: By heaven, I had rather coin my heart, And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash, By any indirection. I did send To you for gold to pay my legions,

Which

Which you denied me; was that done like Cassius?
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

CAS. I deny'd you not.

BRU. You did.

CAS. I did not—he was but a fool
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd my heart.

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities.
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

BRU. I do not. Still you practise them on me.

CAS. You love me not.

BRU. I do not like your faults.

CAS. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

BRU. A flatt'rer's would not, tho' they do appear
As huge as high Olympus.

CAS. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come!
Revenge yourself alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is a-weary of the world;
Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother?
Check'd by a bondman; all his faults observ'd,
Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. O I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast—within a heart
Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold;
If that thou needst a Roman's, take it forth.
I, that deny'd thee gold, will give my heart;
Strike as thou didst at Cæsar: for I know,
When thou didst hate him worse thou lov'dst him better

Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.

BRU. Sheathe your dagger;
Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.
O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger, as a flint bears fire;
Who much inforced, shews a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

CAS. Hath Cassius liv'd
 To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
 When grief and blood ill-temper'd vexeth him?
 BRU. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.
 CAS. Do you confess so much? give me your hand.
 BRU. And my heart too.
 CAS. O Brutus!
 BRU. What's the matter?
 CAS. Have you not love enough to bear with me,
 When that rash humour which my mother gave me,
 Makes me forgetful?
 BRU. Yes, Cassius, and from henceforth
 When you are over earnest with your Brutus,
 He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.
 SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XXV.

O T H E L L O A N D I A G O.

IAGO. MY noble Lord,—
 OTH. What dost thou say, Iago?
 IAGO. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my Lady,
 Know of your love?
 OTH. He did from first to last; why dost thou ask?
 IAGO. But for a satisfaction of my thought,
 No farther harm.
 OTH. Why of thy thought, Iago?
 IAGO. I did not think he'd been acquainted with it.
 OTH. Oh, yes, and went between us very oft.
 IAGO. Indeed?
 OTH. Indeed! ay, indeed. Discern'st thou aught in that?
 Is he not honest?
 IAGO. Honest, my Lord?
 OTH. Honest? ay, honest.
 IAGO. My Lord, for aught I know.

OTH.

OTH. What dost thou think ?

IAGO. Think, my Lord !

OTH. Think, my Lord ! Why, by Heav'n, thou echo'st me ;

As if there were some monster in thy thought,
Too hideous to be shewn. Thou dost mean something ;

I heard thee say but now, " thou lik'dst not that,"—
When Cassio left my wife. What didst not like ?
And when I told thee, he was of my counsel,
In my whole course of wooing ; thou cry'dst, " Indeed !"

And didst contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit. If thou dost love me,
Shew me thy thought.

IAGO. My lord, you know I love you.

OTH. I think thou dost :

And for I know thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more :
For such things in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom ; but in a man that's just,
They're cold dilations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.

IAGO. For Michael Cassio,
I dare be sworn, I think, that he is honest.

OTH. I think so too.

IAGO. Men should be what they seem ;
Or, those that be not, 'would they might seem knaves !

OTH. Certain ! men should be what they seem,

IAGO. Why then I think Cassio's an honest man.

OTH. Nay, yet there's more in this ;

I pray thee speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate ; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words.

IAGO. Good my Lord, pardon me,
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to ;
Utter my thoughts !—Why, say, they're vile and false ;

As where's that palace, whereinto foul things
 Sometimes intrude not ? Who has a breast so pure,
 But some uncleanly apprehensions
 Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit
 With meditations lawful ?

OTH. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago,
 If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his ear
 A stranger to thy thoughts.

IAGO. I do beseech you,
 Think I, perchance, am vicious in my guesses,
 (As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
 To 'spy into abuse ; and oft my jealousy
 Shapes faults that are not) I intreat you then,
 From one that so imperfectly conjects,
 Your wisdom would not build yourself a trouble
 Out of my scattering and unsure observance :
 It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
 Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
 To let you know my thoughts.

OTH. What dost thou mean ?

IAGO. Good name in man and woman, dear my
 Lord,
 Is the immediate jewel of their souls.
 Who steals my purse, steals trash ; 'tis something,
 nothing ;
 'Twas mine, 'tis his ; and has been slave to thousands ;
 But he that filches from me my good name,
 Robs me of that which not enriches him,
 And makes me poor indeed.

OTH, I'll know thy thoughts——

IAGO. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand ;
 Nor shall not whilst 'tis in my custody,

OTH. Ha !

IAGO. Oh, beware,, my Lord, of jealousy ;
 It is a green-ey'd monster, which doth mock
 The meat it feeds on. That cuckold lives in bliss,
 Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger ;
 But, oh, what damned minutes tells he o'er,
 Who doats, yet doubts ; suspects, yet strongly loves!

OTH. O misery !

IAGO.

IAGO. Poor and content, is rich and rich enough;
But riches endless, is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.
Good Heaven! the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

OTH. Why? why is this?
Think'st thou I'd make a life of jealousy?
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions?—Tis not to make me jealous
To say, my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well;
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous.
Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw
The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt,
For she had eyes, and chose me. No, Iago,
I'll see, before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And, on the proof, there is no more but this,
Away at once with love or jealousy.

IAGO. I'm glad of this; for now I shall have reason
To shew the love and duty that I bear you
With franker spirit. Therefore as I'm bound,
Receive it from me. I speak not yet of proof,
Look to your wife, observe her well with Cassio;
Wear your eye, thus; not jealous, nor secure;
I would not have your free and noble nature
Out of self-bounty be abus'd; look to't,
I know our country-disposition well;
In Venice they do let Heav'n see the pranks
They dare not shew their husbands.

OTH. Dost thou say so?

IAGO. She did deceive her father, marrying you;
And when she seem'd to shake, and fear your looks,
She lov'd them most.

OTH. And so she did.

IAGO. Go to then;
She, that, so young, could give out such a seeming
To seal her father's eyes up, close as oak——
He thought it witchcraft—but I'm much to blame:
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon,
For too much loving you.

OTH. I am bound to you for ever.

IAGO.

IAGO. I see this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

OTH. Not a jot, not a jot,

IAGO. Trust me, I fear it has ,

I hope you will consider, what is spoke

Comes from my love. But I do see you're mov'd—

I am to pray you, not to strain my speech

To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,

Than to suspicion.

OTH. I will not.

IAGO. Should you do so, my Lord,

My speech would fall into such vile success,

Which my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend.

My Lord, I see you're mov'd——

OTH. No, not much mov'd——

I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

IAGO. Long live she so! and long live you to think so!

OTH. And yet, how nature erring from itself—

IAGO. Ay, there's the point ;—as (to be bold with you)

Not to affect many proposed matches

Of her own clime, complexion, and degree ;

Whereto we see in all things nature tends :

Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,

Foul disproportions, thoughts unnatural.

But, pardon me, I do not in position

Distinctly speak of her ; tho' I may fear,

Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,

May fall to match you with her country-forms,

And, haply, so repent.

OTH. Farewel, farewell ;

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more :

Set on thy wife t'observe. Leave me, Iago.

IAGO. My Lord, I take my leave.

OTH. Why did I marry?

This honest creature, doubtless,

Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

IAGO. My Lord, I would I might intreat your honour

To scan this thing no further ; leave it to time :

Altho'

Altho' 'tis fit that Cassio have his place,
 For, sure, he fills it up with great ability ;
 Yet if you please to hold him off a while,
 You shall by that perceive him and his means ;
 Note, if your Lady strain his entertainment
 With any strong or vehement importunity ;
 Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,
 Let me be thought too busy in my fears,
 (As worthy cause I have to fear I am)
 And hold her free, I do beseech your Honour.

OTH. Fear not my government.

IAGO. I once more take my leave.

HAMLET's SOLILOQUY ON HIS MOTHER's MARRIAGE.

OH that this too too solid flesh would melt,
 Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew !
 Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
 His canon 'gainst self-slaughter !
 How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable,
 Seem to me all the uses of this world !
 Fie on't ! oh fie ! 'tis an unweeded garden,
 That grows to seed ; things rank, and gross in nature,
 Possess it merely. That it should come to this !
 But two months dead ! nay, not so much ; not two :—
 So excellent a king, that was, to this !
 Hyperion to a satyr : so loving to my mother,
 That he permitted not the winds of heav'n
 Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth !
 Must I remember——why, she would hang on him,
 As if increase of appetite had grown
 By what it fed on ; yet, yet within a month,——
 Let me not think——Frailty, thy name is Woman !
 A little month ! or ere those shoes were old,
 With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
 Like Niobe, all tears——Why, she, ev'n she—— (O heav'n !

(O heav'n ! a beast that wants discourse of reason,
Would have mourn'd longer——) married with mine
uncle,

My father's brother ; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules. Within a month !——

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears

Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,

She married——Oh, most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets !

It is not, nor it cannot come to good.

But break, my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

SHAKESPEARE.

C H A P. XXVII.

HAMLET AND GHOST.

HAM. ANGELS and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin
damn'd,

Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell,

Be thy intent wicked or charitable,

Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,

That I will speak to thee. I'll call thee Hamlet,

King, father, Royal Dane : oh ! answer me ;

Let me not burst in ignorance ; but tell,

Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in earth,

Have burst their cearments ? why the sepulchre,

Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,

Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,

To cast thee up again ? What may this mean ?

That thou, dead corse, again in compleat steel,

Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,

Making night hideous, and us fools of nature

So horridly to shake our disposition

With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls ?

Say, why is this ? wherefore ? what should we do ?

GHOST. Mark me.

HAM. I will.

GHOST.

GHOST. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

HAM. Alas, poor ghost !

GHOST. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall unfold.

HAM. Speak, I am bound to hear.

GHOST. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

HAM. What ?

GHOST. I am thy father's spirit ;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day, confin'd to fast in fire ;
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature,
Are burnt and purg'd away. But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison house
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand an end
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine ;
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood ; list ; oh list !
If thou did'st ever thy dear father love——

HAM. O heav'n !

GHOST. Revenge his soul and most unnatural murder.

HAM. Murder ?

GHOST. Murder most foul, as in the best it is ;
But this most foul, strange and unnatural.

HAM. Haste me to know it, that I, with wings as swift

As meditation or the thoughts of love,
May fly to my revenge.

GHOST. I find thee apt ;
And duller shouldst thou be, than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe's wharf,
Wouldst thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear :
'Tis given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent

A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark
Is by a forged process of my death
Rankly abus'd : but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life,
Now wears his crown.

HAM. Oh, my prophetic soul ! my uncle !

GHOST. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with trait'rous gifts,
(O wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce !) won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming-virtuous Queen.

Oh Hamlet, what a falling off was there !

But soft ! methinks I scent the morning air——

Brief let me be : Sleeping within mine orchard,

My custom always of the afternoon,

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole

With juice of cursed hebenon in a phial,

And in the porches of mine ear did pour

The leperous distilment.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,

Of life, of crown, of Queen, at once bereft ;

Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin ;

No reck'ning made ! but sent to my account

With all my imperfections on my head !

HAM. Oh horrible ! oh horrible ! most horrible !

GHOST. If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not ;

But howsoever thou pursu'st this act,

Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive

Against thy mother aught ; leave her to heav'n.

And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,

To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once !

The glow-worm shews the matin to be near,

And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire.

Adieu, adieu, adieu : remember me.

HAM. Oh, all you host of heav'n ! oh earth !
what else ?

And shall I couple hell ? oh fie ! hold, my heart !

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old ;

But bear me stiffly up. Remember thee !

Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat

In this distracted globe ; remember thee !
 Yea, from the table of my memory
 I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
 All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
 That youth and observation copied there ;
 And thy commandment all alone shall live
 Within the book and volume of my brain,
 Unmix'd with baser matter.

SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XXVIII.

HAMLET'S SOLILOQUY ON DEATH.

TO be, or not to be ?—that is the question.—
 Whether it is nobler in the mind to suffer
 The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune ;
 Or to take up arms against a sea of troubles,
 And by opposing end them ?—To die,—to sleep—
 No more ; and by a sleep, to say, we end
 The heart ache, and a thousand natural shocks
 That flesh is heir to ;—'tis a consummation
 Devoutly to be wish'd. To die—to sleep—
 To sleep ? perchance to dream ; — ay, there's the rub.

For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
 When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
 Must give us pause.—There's the respect
 That makes calamity of so long life :
 For who would bear the whips and scorns of th' time,
 Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
 The pang of despis'd love, the law's delay,
 The insolence of office, and the spurns
 That patient merit of th' unworthy takes ;
 When he himself might his quietus make
 With a bare-bodkin ? Who would fardels bear,
 To groan and sweat under a weary life ;
 But that the dread of something after death
 (That undiscover'd country, from whose bourne
 No traveller returns) puzzles the will ;

And

And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
 Than fly to others that we know not of ?
 Thus conscience does make cowards of us all :
 And thus the native hue of resolution
 Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought ;
 And enterprises of great pith and moment,
 With this regard their currents turn awry,
 And lose the name of action.

SHAKESPEAR.

C H A P. XXIX.

SOLILOQUY OF THE KING IN HAMLET.

OH ! my offence is rank, it smells to heav'n,
 It hath the primal, eldest curse upon't ;
 A brother's murder—Pray I cannot :
 Though inclination be as sharp as 'twill,
 My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent ;
 And, like a man to double business bound,
 I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
 And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
 Were thicker than itself with brother's blood ?
 Is there not rain enough in the sweet heav'ns
 To wash it white as snow ? whereto serves mercy,
 But to confront the visage of offence ?
 And what's in prayer, but this twofold force,
 To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
 Or pardon'd being down ?—Then I'll look up ;
 My fault is past.—But oh, what form of prayer
 Can serve my turn ? Forgive me my foul murder !—
 That cannot be, since I am still possess'd
 Of those effects for which I did the murder,
 My crown, mine own ambition, and my Queen.
 May one be pardon'd and retain th' offence ?
 In the corrupted currents of this world,
 Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice ;
 And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
 Buys out the laws. But 'tis not so above.
 There is no shuffling ; there the action lies

In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd,
 Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
 To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
 Try what repentance can; what can it not?
 Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
 Oh wretched state! oh bosom black as death!
 Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
 Art more engag'd! Help, angels! make assay!
 Bow, stubborn knees; and, heart, with strings of steel,
 Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!
 All may be well.

SHAKESPEARE.

C H A P. XXX.

ODE ON ST. CECILIA'S DAY.

DESCEND, ye Nine! descend and sing:
 The breathing instruments inspire,
 Wake into voice each silent string,
 And sweep the sounding lyre
 In a sadly-pleasing strain—
 Let the warbling lute complain:
 Let the loud trumpets sound,
 'Till the roofs all around
 The shrill echoes rebound.

While in more lengthen'd notes and slow,
 The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow.
 Hark! the numbers soft and clear,
 Gently steal upon the ear;
 Now louder, and yet louder rise,
 And fill with spreading sounds the skies;
 Exulting in triumph now swell the bold notes,
 In broken air, trembling, the wild music floats;
 'Till, by degrees, remote and small,
 The strains decay,
 And melt away,
 In a dying, dying fall.

By Music, minds an equal temper know,
 Nor swell too high, nor sink too low.
 If in the breast tumultuous joys arise,
 Music her soft, assuasive voice applies ;
 Or, when the soul is press'd with cares,
 Exalts her in enlivening airs.

Warriors she fires with animated sounds ;
 Pours balm into the bleeding lovers wounds :
 Melancholy lifts her head,
 Morpheus rouses from his bed,
 Sloth unfolds her arms and wakes,
 Lift'ning Envy drops her snakes ;
 Intestine war no more our Passions wage,
 And giddy Factions hear away their rage.

But when our country's cause provokes to Arms,
 How martial music every bosom warms !
 So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
 High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
 While Argo saw her kindred trees
 Descend from Pelion to the main,
 Transported demi-gods stood round,
 And men grew heroes at the sound,
 Enflam'd with glory's charms ;
 Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
 And half unsheath'd the shining blade ;
 And seas, and rocks, and skies rebound
 To arms, to arms, to arms !

But when thro' all th' infernal bounds,
 Which flaming Phlegeton, surrounds,
 Love, strong as Death, the Poet led
 To the pale nations of the dead,
 What sounds were heard,
 What scenes appear'd,
 O'er all the dreary coasts !
 Dreadful gleams,
 Dismal screams,
 Fires that glow,
 Shrieks of woe,

Sullen moans,
 Hollow groans,
 And cries of tortur'd ghosts !
 But hark ! he strikes the golden lyre ;
 And see ! the tortur'd ghosts respire,
 See, shady forms advance !
 Thy stone, O Syfiphus, stands still,
 Ixion rests upon his wheel,
 And the pale spectres dance !
 The furies sink upon their iron beds,
 And snakes uncurl'd hang list'ning round their heads.

By the streams that ever flow,
 By the fragrant winds that blow
 O'er th' Elysian flow'rs ;
 By those happy souls who dwell
 In yellow meads of Asphodel,
 Or Amaranthine bow'rs ;
 By the hero's armed shades,
 Glitt'ring thro' the gloomy glades ;
 By the youths that dy'd for love,
 Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
 Restore, restore Eurydice to life :
 Oh take the husband, or return the wife !
 He sung, and hell consented
 To hear the Poet's prayer :
 Stern Proserpine relented,
 And gave him back the fair.
 Thus song could prevail
 O'er death, and o'er hell,
 A conquest how hard, and how glorious !
 Tho' fate had fast bound her
 With Styx nine times round her,
 Yet music and love were victorious.

But soon, too soon, the lover turns his eyes :
 Again she falls, again she dies, she dies !
 How wilt thou now the fatal sisters move ?
 No crime was thine, if 'tis no crime to love.
 Now under hanging mountains,
 Beside the falls of fountains,

Or where Hebrus wanders,
 Rolling in mæanders,
 All alone,
 Unheard, unknown,
 He makes his moan ;
 And calls her ghost,
 For ever, ever, ever lost !
 Now with furies surrounded,
 Despairing, confounded,
 He trembles, he glows,
 Amidst Rhodope's snows ;
 See, wild as the winds, o'er the desert he flies ;
 Hark ! Hæmus resounds with the Bacchanals cries—
 Ah see, he dies !
 Yet ev'n in death Eurydice he sung,
 Eurydice still trembled on his tongue,
 Eurydice the woods,
 Eurydice the floods,
 Eurydice the rocks, and hollow mountains rung.

Music the fiercest grief can charm,
 And fate's severest rage disarm :
 Music can soften pain to ease,
 And make despair and madness please :
 Our joys below it can improve,
 And antedate the bliss above.
 This the divine Cecilia found.
 And to her Maker's praise confin'd the sound.
 When the full organ joins the tuneful quire,
 Th' immortal pow'rs incline their ear :
 Borne on the swelling notes our souls aspire,
 While solemn airs improve the sacred fire ;
 And Angels lean from heav'n to hear.
 Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,
 'To bright Cecilia greater power is giv'n ;
 His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,
 Hers lift the soul to heav'n.

POPE.

C H A P. XXXI.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST.

TWAS at the royal feast, for Persia won,
 By Philip's warlike son:
 Aloft in awful state
 The god-like hero sat
 On his imperial throne:
 His valiant peers were plac'd around;
 Their brows with roses and with myrtle bound:
 So should desert in arms be crown'd.
 The lovely Thais by his side
 Sat, like a blooming eastern bride,
 In flow'r of youth and beauty's pride.
 Happy, happy, happy pair!
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave deserve the fair.

Timotheus plac'd on high
 Amid the tuneful quire,
 With flying fingers touch'd the lyre:
 The trembling notes ascend the sky,
 And heavenly joys inspire.

The song began from Jove;
 Who left his blissful seats above,
 Such is the pow'r of mighty love!
 A dragon's fiery form bely'd the God:
 Sublime on radiant spheres he rode,
 When he the fair Olympia press'd,
 And while he sought her snowy breast:
 Then, round her slender waist he curl'd,
 And stamp'd an image of himself, a sov'reign of the world.—

The listning crowd admire the lofty sound;
 A present deity, they shout around:
 A present deity, the vaulted roofs rebound:
 With ravish'd ears
 The monarch hears,

Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus then, the sweet musician sung;

Of Bacchus ever fair, and ever young :
The jolly god in triumph comes;
Sound the trumpets, beat the drums;
Flush'd with a purple grace
He shews his honest face.

Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes !

Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain :
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldiers' pleasure;
 Rich the treasure,
 Sweet the pleasure;
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Sooth'd with the sound the king grew vain;
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes; and thrice he slew
 the slain.—

The master saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,
Chang'd his hand and check'd his pride.
He chose a mournful muse
Soft pity to infuse :
He sung Darius great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fall'n, fall'n, fall'n, fall'n,
Fall'n from his high estate,
And weltring in his blood :
Deserted at his utmost need,
By those his former bounty fed,
On the bare earth expos'd he lies,
With not a friend to close his eyes.

With down-cast look the joyless victor fate,
Revolving in his alter'd soul

The

The various turns of fate below;
And now and then a sigh he stole;
And tears began to flow.

The mighty master smil'd, to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move;
For pity melts the mind to love.

Softly sweet in Lydian measures,
Soon he sooth'd his soul to pleasures.
War he sung is toil and trouble;
Honour but an empty bubble;

Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying:
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, O, think it worth enjoying!

Lovely Thais fits beside thee,

Take the good the gods provide thee.—

The many rend the skies with loud applause;
So love was crown'd, but music won the cause.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair

Who caus'd his care,

And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,

Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again:

At length, with love and wine at once oppress'd,
The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

Now strike the golden lyre again;

A louder yet, and yet, a louder strain.

Break his bands of sleep asunder,

And rouse him like a rattling peal of thunder.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound

Has rais'd up his head;

As awak'd from the dead,

And amaz'd, he stares around.

Revenge, revenge, Timotheus cries,

See the Furies arise,

See the snakes that they rear,

How they hiss in their hair,

And the sparkles that flash from their eyes!

Beld

Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand!

These are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,
And unbury'd remain
Inglorious on the plain:

Give the vengeance due

To the valiant crew:

Behold how they toss their torches on high,

How they point to the Persian abodes,
And glitt'ring temples of their hostile gods!—

The Princes applaud, with a furious joy;

And the King seiz'd a flambeau, with zeal to destroy;

Thais led the way,

To light him to his prey,

And, like another Helen, fir'd another Troy.

Thus, long ago

Ere heaving bellows learn'd to blow,

While organs yet were mute;

Timotheus to his breathing flute

And sounding lyre,

Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.

At last divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame;

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,

And added length to solemn sounds,

With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,

Or both divide the crown;

He rais'd a mortal to the skies;

She drew an angel down.
